E. Irwin Dies Sunday—At His Home in Salem
E. Irwin, former guard at the state penitentiary and member of the Salem police force, died at his home at 255 North Twenty-first street Sunday at the age of 75.

Mr. Irwin was born in Union county, Tenn., March 28, 1851, and was married in 1870 to Mary Hill. They settled in Newmarket, Tenn., where they engaged in the merchandising business. To this union were born 11 children, five of whom are still living.

In 1883 the Irwins moved to Oregon and settled on a farm near Lebanon. In the fall of 1900 the family removed to Salem where they have lived ever since. Up until the past two years Mr. Irwin has been an active worker, serving several years as guard at the penitentiary and as a member of the city police force.

Mr. Irwin is survived by his wife and five children: Mrs. Paul Velaricus of Bellingham, Wash.; Mrs. C. W. Bogart of Lebanon; Mrs. William Walck of Vancouver, Wash.; Moss T. Irwin and Ted Irwin, both of Salem. Also by 10 grandchildren and six brothers and sisters, Mrs. Lee Boeler, Mrs. Alfred Ousley, Mrs. Gibson Sharp, Mrs. George Snoderley, Harvey Irwin and Buck Irwin, all of Knoxvile, Tenn., besides a host of friends in and around Salem.

MUSSOLINI ESCAPE BELIEVED MIRACLE

Graphic Description of Attempted Assassination Reaches Country
The following graphic description of the attempted assassination of Premier Mussolini Sunday evening, written in Bologna early Monday by a staff correspondent of the Associated Press did not reach this country until today (Tuesday) apparently delayed by the Italian censorship.

BOLOGNA, Italy, Nov. 1. (AP)—Premier Mussolini escaped death twice within the space of several seconds Sunday evening when the second attempt to assassinate him within six weeks failed.

After a bullet fired at a distance of less than 20 inches miraculously missed the mark, ripping his coat sash but harmlessly grazing his body, Premier Mussolini boldly whipped around toward the sound of the detonation, his piercing eyes transfixed his youthful assailant. For a space of seconds the premier with jaws tightly set and deathly pale and the youth with a smoking revolver in his right hand remained staring in each others eyes, while a tomblike hush of astonishment fell upon the massed multitude which a moment before had been screaming itself hoarse. Then the youth pulled the trigger the second time. His automatic pistol missed fire and was torn from his hands by Dr. Italo Balbo and Deputy Ricci, who, recovering from a momentary paralysis of amazement, hurled themselves at him.

Dr. Duce arose from his seat and shouted: "Stop, look, I am untouched."

But the boy—about 15 years old—already had been punished. The triple line of soldiers along the street broke under the pressure of the crowd impelled by a rage such as only an emotional Italian assembly can feel. Each man seemed to want to be sure actually to participate in the destruction of him who dared to flaunt the fascist battle cry "Woe to him who touches Il Duce." The assailant lived only long enough to realize that his attempt had failed. Three persons were seriously stabbed, one probably fatally, during the melee while scores of others were bruised.

The bullet after passing through Mussolini's coat sash and sleeve of the mayor of Bologna, struck a column in a nearby building.

In the evening a rude placard with a commemorative inscription was placed above the spot. A young woman told the police that the youth had annoyed her with his remarks until she was forced to give up her place on the edge of the crowd almost within arm's length of the premier's automobile.

RED CROSS WORKS WELL IN FLORIDA

Good Organization and Mobilization Bring Fast Relief to Stricken

WASHINGTON — (AP) — The speed with which the Red Cross rushed into the Florida hurricane area with its relief machine geared to full speed demonstrated the remarkable organization of this army of mercy. It disclosed at the same time plans of action and mobilization such as might be employed by the commander of a great fighting force.

It is the aim of the Red Cross to be at the scene of disaster before the smoke has cleared or the rains have settled. Every means of transportation and communication are utilized to accelerate the arrival of relief.

Quick action in disasters is made possible by careful organization, reaching from national headquarters here into practically every county of every state. Red Cross chapters, of which there are nearly 3500, maintain committees on disaster relief with subcommittees on food, shelter, clothing and medical aid. Lists are kept of public halls available for use as hospitals, or other purposes, names and addresses of capable workers and locations of supplies of food, clothing, bedding and medicine.

Behind the chapter organization covering a larger area, lie the resources of the Red Cross branch offices and national headquarters. When disaster strikes, the chapter committee on relief goes immediately into action, the chairman always notifying the branch office, giving an estimate of the number of dead, injured, homeless, houses destroyed, families affected and stating the kind of relief most needed.

Similarly, Red Cross nurses are quickly mobilized. Each state has its nursing committee and subcommittees with lists of nurses, their addresses and telephone numbers. Those nearest are rushed to the stricken community.

Branch offices are located at San Francisco and St. Louis, national headquarters serving the eastern area. These constitute a medium through which funds, relief workers and supplies of nearby chapters are made available. The branch office contacts with national headquarters so that, if necessary, the resources of a number of states, or the entire country, can be mobilized.

In major disasters, such as the Florida hurricane, national headquarters acts without waiting for a chapter report, sending the national director of disaster relief, or a representative, to the scene. When it so acts all resources of the Red Cross can be applied as a unit. Not including doctors and nurses, headquarters can muster a reserve of 300 trained disaster relief workers.

During the emergency period, following a disaster, workers concentrate on an attempt to meet the immediate needs of the sufferers as quickly and efficiently as possible. First consideration is given the injured. Epidemics are forestalled by inoculation. First-aid stations, hospitals, canteens, are opened. Shelter is provided in homes, hotels and lodging houses or, if these have been destroyed, in tent cities and refugee camps, erected by the Red Cross. Tents and other equipment are often provided by the army and navy whose resources are always available to the organization inasmuch as the Red Cross is the government's official relief agency.

The director of disaster relief usually calls a meeting of town officials and is given full charge of relief work. In this capacity he has the power of a general in war. All other agencies must act through the Red Cross.

Administration costs in a disaster are always paid by national headquarters. All funds solicited from the public for relief. In small disasters funds are raised by a local appeal. When the disaster is of major proportions the appeal covers a wider area, if not the entire country, the president of the United States, as president of the Red Cross, issuing a proclamation calling for contributions.

Permanent relief work, in the months following a disaster, includes the rebuilding and repairing of homes for those whose resources were wiped out entirely; aid to farmers who have lost crops and equipment; business rehabilitation for small tradesmen and the establishment of trust funds for widows and orphans. Accounts of expenditures for each disaster are audited by a local committee and, subsequently, by the war department.

Actual relief work is only part of the program. The congressional charter under which the Red Cross operates not only commands it to extend relief in emergencies at home and abroad, but to seek to prevent such emergencies. This can, in many instances, be done.

Close cooperation is maintained with weather-forecasters throughout the country, who notify national headquarters and branch offices of impending floods and storms. It is now possible, at flood-time, to warn Mississippi towns 48 hours in advance and even tell how much the water will rise. Hurricanes are watched, their direction charted and towns warned if possible for advance preparations.

Chapters in different towns try to telephone warnings down the line when a funnel cloud announces the approach of a tornado so that people may take to their cellars. Such preparedness frequently reduces losses in property.

By careful engineering schemes some disasters can be prevented. The Red Cross believes the Johnstown flood can never be repeated because of a sea-wall since constructed through cooperation between the government, the Red Cross and the engineering profession. Nor does it believe Pueblo can have another such disastrous flood.

The Red Cross is now cooperating in plans to reduce flood hazards at El Paso, Texas, and Mexican towns, by straightening the Rio Grande river to eliminate an "S"-shaped twist.

ALABAMA WARDEN HELD FOR MURDER

Witness Tells of Cruel Treatment Accorded Prisoners at Mine

BIRMINGHAM, Ala., Nov. 2.—(AP)—Leading with his main witness, the state today plunged into the midst of its attack on Charles R. Davis, former warden, charged with the murder of James Knox at Flat Top prison mine in 1924.

Wiley Pugh, whose statement several months ago to state authorities precipitated an investigation which resulted in the indictment of six persons in connection with the deaths of convicts at prison mines throughout the state was sent to the stand.

Pugh told of Knox being beaten and then ducked in a laundry vat while he begged Flat Top officials to spare his life. His story to the jury included a statement which the witness attributed to Davis after Knox pleaded for his life.

OIL TOWNS BONDED AND THEN BUSTED

Oklahoma Boom Cities Plan for Future Growth, Then Fail to Grow

OKLAHOMA CITY.—(AP)—Cities that "might have been" and on which high tax rates were levied after heavy bond issues had voted, are frequent in Oklahoma history.

Veval and Pershing, both small oil towns in Oklahoma, were given as examples by Randall Cobb, assistant attorney general in charge of the state bond department.

Six years ago, oil was brought to the surface in the vicinity of the little village of Pershing. Visualizing a large city in the future, the ambitious citizens voted a $140,000 bond issue for the purpose of building a water works system.

Oil production dwindled and the city's population decreased. The town is now indebted for nearly half its valuation. Most of the bonds, which were sold, are being held by municipal sinking funds.

The story of Pershing was repeated at Devall. When oil was found, a "boom" occurred and citizens voted large amounts for municipal improvements. Then the population decreased and taxes bounded to excessive rates. A number of Devall citizens moved their homes outside the city limits to avoid paying the levy.
