Elsinore, Oregon and Grand Theaters Will Have Armistice Features

Salem theatergoers will be offered an unusual treat on Armistice Day, next Thursday, when the Elsinore, Oregon and Grand theaters will have special pictures for that day only.

The Elsinore will offer an appropriate film entitled "So This is Paris" starring Monte Blue and Patsy Ruth Miller. It portrays a Parisian cafe at the height of the midnight revel when hundreds are doing the Charleston. It is the zenith of jazz!

"The Sap" the story of a coward who makes good after he comes home from a "hero" with medals that he did not rightfully win will be the feature at the Oregon theater.

Ben Lyon and May McAvoy are featured in a novel production entitled "The Savage" that will run at the Grand, formerly the Heilig theater, on Armistice day. A prehistoric Brontosaurus furnishes many thrills when it pursues scientists around the jungle of a tropical island with Ben Lyon, in the role of the savage, riding it.

Didn't know there were 720 paper mill employees, did you? Growing.

"The Black Pirate" drew crowded houses yesterday. Needs to be in it one of the highest priced screen plays ever brought to Salem, and the first in technicolor.

A very prominent Salem man said yesterday that he was ready to vote for $4,000,000 bonds, if it took that much to buy the water works and bring in mountain water, with power sales on the way down. Perhaps it would be better to feel our way. Buy the water works first. Then get the mountain water, as soon as we are sure it will be self sustaining, and perhaps a little more, to give lower rates, and provide for a sinking fund. The thing can be made to pay for itself in time, besides giving consumers lower rates.

TAX CUT REFUND CAUSES FLURRY AT WASHINGTON

(Continued from page 1.) The business outlook should be studied a bit before anything was done. More outspoken was Senator Simmons of North Carolina, ranking democrat on the finance committee, who described the executive's proposal as a "humiliating surrender," and demanded again that the taxpayers be given a straight out reduction in taxes rather than the refund.

Generally, in republican and democratic circles alike, the move was taken to mean that the session of congress beginning one month from today would have the issue thrust upon it from opposing camps—the democrats holding to their demand for straight out tax reduction, and the president's followers countering with the plan for rebates. Secretary Mellon, genius of the administration's financial policies, was not in town when the official White House spokesman dropped the words setting forth the president's approval of the rebate idea. The secretary has planned heretofore to apply the $250,000,000 surplus for this fiscal year on the retirement of the public debt. Treasury spokesman explained, however, that the idea was entirely the president's, and that the proposal could be accomplished without embarrassment to the treasury.

It was emphasized that the treasury would urge that the refund be accomplished through the credit plan, which would spread the benefit over next year's income tax payments. About 3,000,000 individuals and corporations would benefit by the program, and it was estimated that if immediate refunds were ordered by congress rather than credit on next year's taxes it would cost much in routine expense to return $200,000,000 to the taxpayers.

Under the program for a 10 per cent refund the average taxpayer would get little more than a dollar. Those with taxable incomes of less than $5,000 would get little more than 75 cents each.

About three persons paid taxes amounting to more than $1,000, last year, and it was figured the largest single taxpayer would get about $500,000. The treasury stood firm today on its contention that a permanent tax reduction cannot safely be made at this time.

WITNESS TELLS STORY OF $2500 BRIBE MONEY

(Continued from page 1.) choir singer in October of the following year. In direct examination he testified that he deserted the navy and was dishonorably discharged from that branch of the United States army forces.

Under cross examination he was asked by Clarence E. Case, defense attorney: "And you were drunk for 41 days when you got in trouble in connection with the army desertion?" "Yes."

"And then you deserted the New Jersey state police, leaving three months' pay behind you?" "Well, I left and didn't wait to get my pay."

Then Prosecutor Simpson asked a question. "Why did you leave the New Jersey police," that Senator Case calls desertion?" asked Simpson. "I was paid."

"By whom?" "Prosecutor Beckman."

"You mean Azariah Beckman, who was prosecutor of Somerset county then?" "Yes."

"How much did he pay you?" "Twenty-five hundred dollars." "What did he pay you that money for?" "To leave the state."

"Why did he wish you to leave the state?" "He didn't say."

Defense attorneys resumed the questioning. "Azariah Beckman is dead, is he not?" "So I understand."

"That's all." "Prosecutor Simpson took the floor again."

"You didn't know that he was dead when you made an affidavit that you were paid to leave the state, did you?" "No."

"That's all." "Azariah Beckman, who died two years ago, was prosecutor of Somerset county at the time Mr. Hall and Mrs. Mills were slain. Later he was made a district judge."

CANADIAN SYSTEM LIKED

FAMOUS INVENTOR FAVORS SERVING HARD LIQUOR. BRISTOL, Va., Tenn., Nov. 6.—(AP)—Establishment of the Canadian system of handling liquor was advocated by Hudson Maxim, inventor, who is visiting this section for his health. Mr. Maxim declared he was spending the major part of his time in advocating repeal of the 18th amendment.

Nevertheless, Mr. Maxim believes hard liquors should be denied to the negroes. Asked how the negroes could be denied liquors and the white population be allowed to have it, he said: "Well, you of the South find no trouble in disfranchising the negro; you find no difficulty in 'Jim Crowing' him—and mind you, I am not objecting to this—so I don't think you would have any trouble."

Where Fate Matches Men

"Have you ever been to a prize-fight, lady?" "Horrors, no!" Up goes your eyebrow and you shrug your shoulder in that scornful way of yours. "Why should I go to watch two men make brutes of themselves, each deliberately striving to physically disable the other so that upon his brow may be placed the laurel wreath, his by right of blows and brawn? Unbeautiful, violent, vulgar—such a spectacle does not appeal to me at all!"

Spoken like a perfect lady! Not for a moment did we expect it would. There is little about a prize fight calculated to appeal to a dainty aesthetic. Being truthful, we must admit that it is not our own favorite sport.

Yet had you either from choice or necessity ever occupied a ringside seat you would realize that there is another angle from which the unprejudiced view the prize-fight. Frank in its brutality, founded on rank materialism, it is nevertheless an exhibition of great physical courage, a contest of rapierslike dexterity of eye and arm, a proof of the efficacy of rigid training and unremitting preparation for unknown odds.

What is this old world but a ring in which Fate, the manager, matches man against first one adversary and then another? True, we may fight with our mind, our heart, our soul instead of with our fists, but, lest we unduly despise the physical, we may well remember that the struggle for these is intensified if they have not good health as ally.

As in the prize ring, so in everyday living, it is training that helps us to meet and to defeat obstacles. There are many things besides mere bulk and technique that count for victory in the ring—poise, cool-headedness, good nature, celerity, caution, fineness and gameness, most of all gameness.

Are the requirements for winning in the Greater Game fundamentally different? In the ring the contestants are exposed to the taunts of the multitudes. Our own combats in life's arena are often rewarded by the criticism, scorn and misunderstanding of not only bystanders but of those who should stand by us, our own folk.

Once let the barbed shafts of ridicule pierce his skin, excite him to anger, shake his self-control, and that fighter is a loser. "They say" has worked great harm upon countless individuals, often diverting their effort from successful channels. The only salvation for the thin-skinned person is good nature, lots of it, for good nature will effect a jibe-proof coating that will shed slurs and sneers as a duck's back sheds water.

Celerity! Many an opportunity has been lost because quick and decisive thinking failed to open the door to its knock. Caution! Not a few chances have been sent skidding down the hill of Might-Have-Been by too impulsive action. Ask any sportsman what he thinks of the value of two qualities, caution and celerity in consistent proportions.

Finesse! There are times in everyday living, as in the ring, when it takes all the craft, tact and ingenuity of which one is possessed to keep from being knocked down. As for gameness, it is the thing, the only thing, that will help a fellow back upon his feet again when he has been knocked down.

And knocked down he will be. No fighter ever won the world's championship without biting the dust more times than he would like to count. No man's life is crowned with success who has not been brought to his knees again and again.

But no good fighter calls himself out because he is down! No one likes to be defeated. Covering oneself with glory before a throng is one thing; burdening oneself with loss is quite another, especially when one has done the very best he could. Just the same, sometimes it is failure—once, twice, three times—that assures the ultimate victory. Out of his very weakness man rebuilds his strength.
