live under conditions that seriously jeopardize health, morals and respectable family life.

"We propose in addition to the physical surrounding to provide in 'Mott Hut' a service program that will help people understand and appreciate the Christian way of life and we hope and expect that the result will be a real Christian community.

"The village is in one of the manufacturing suburbs of Shanghai where about 100,000 people of the poorer classes live. There are no public service institutions in that section of the city, which is located across the river from Shanghai on a point of land in a bend of the river. The river is about half a mile wide and there is no bridge, so the people are shut off by the river, by their poverty and by their superstitions from the services provided for the people of Shanghai proper.

"At the laying of the cornerstone, Dr. Rufus Jones said, 'I have had many moving experiences during these three months in China, but this is certainly one of the most thrilling of them all. As soon as I heard of the plan to build these houses in Shanghai, I urged our American committee to help the enterprise and I am thankful to know that our contribution aided the realization of the project.

"I am most happy to join today in the celebration of the laying of the cornerstone of the first village. This is a very significant event. It is only the beginning of a far-reaching movement that will have far-reaching results. We shall some day insist that those who toil and are weary with the world's labor shall be housed in comfort and shall have quiet and peaceful homes with open spaces around them and a real chance for health and happiness. All hail this fine beginning.

"We expect to have a baby clinic, a day nursery and a day and evening classes of various kinds for the men and women and the boys and girls who live in and near this village.

"Our main work in the village will be with the coming generation. The secretary in charge had training in the boys department and is a very able organizer and promoter. He with his family will live in the village and try by example as well as by words to help raise the standards of these few families who have lived in very undesirable surroundings and know next to nothing of sanitation and hygiene.

"The public interest in this village is wide-spread and already one man has started building a duplicate except he will not provide the 'Y' hut and program which we feel is to be the basis of any success we attain in this experiment."

KING SNAKES LIKE UNTO THE RATTLER

is really deceived by it. One time he had a neighbor by the name of Jim Jimmerson. Jim was really not a bad man at all, if once you could get down underneath the outside of his life. He was kind at heart, but you would never know it. On the outside he was cruel, but he did not intend to be. He was really honest, but few people liked to trust him. Not that he ever cheated any one, but some how people just were afraid to trust him. Jim was gruff, cross, loud spoken, bitter. He seemed to be made up of burrs and all the burrs were on the outside. Jim had a peculiar notion about life. He was so much afraid that folks would think he was a hypocrite, that he was the worst kind of one.

Sometimes, folks wondered if Jim thought it was smart to be rough. Few folks liked him. The men he worked with got on with him fairly well, but none of them chose him for a friend. In his family he was cross in the home and hard with the children, and they sort of feared him. He rubbed most folks the wrong way. One day Jim was hurt at the mill, and they took him to the hospital. The nurses were kind to him, and the physician was very skillful. For some days Jim was too sick and weak to notice much about him. But he had time to think, and when his friends came to see him, the few he had, he was quite different. They noticed it, and commented on the change that came over Jim. A Salvation Army captain came and she read the Bible to Jim and prayed with him. He saw how he had been putting the worst side out and decided that he would no longer be that kind of sham, but that he would be his real self. The king snake was too much for the rattler. Jim had been too much like men who are rough, savage and unkind. So his nature was changed, he became a new man from that day, and a new power came into his life.
