

SALEM HAS OLDEST AND LARGEST BUYER

Mr. Fry Has Been Finding Markets Even Since We Produced Any Oil

Das J. Fry, Salem, Oregon, is the oldest and most extensive buyer of peppermint oil in this section. Last year he bought most of the oil at $11 to $14 a pound. (This was before the runaway market came, late in the season.) He paid for the same quality in 1924, $4.10 a pound. He has been buying off this year, and is still buying it, at the market prices, which have been constantly falling. He has bought all the way down. He has been paying $3.50 to $4 the past few days, according to quality. The lowered prices of the past few weeks have been caused partly by the bankers of Indiana compelling growers to sell who had put up their oil as collateral. Up to a few days ago, the New York quotation was $5.50 to $6.75 for crude oil—that is, the "white" oil produced here, or "natural" oil. (According to another Salem authority, the wires brought the New York quotation of yesterday at $4.10 a pound for crude oil.)

Mr. Fry keeps some oil on hand all the time for customers throughout the country. He is constantly shipping to the great city and other market centers.

The natural oil comes to Mr. Fry from the growers in 20-pound galvanized iron cans. He ships it out in barrels, in order to prevent waste from leakage or evaporation. It is very volatile, and subject to waste.

The eastern price of peppermint oil for the 20 year period, up to last year, averaged $2.98 a pound. The lowest price in the 20 years was $1.50 a pound.

As most readers know, Mr. Fry is a large buyer of crude drugs, including Oregon grape root, chile bark, Oregon balsam fir, and when there have been markets for them, wild cherry bark, skunk cabbage, fox glove, etc. When labor conditions adjust themselves all over the world, Mr. Fry expects to see a large crude drug business grow up here in western Oregon. Mr. Fry thinks Salem should have a refinery for peppermint oil. He expects to see an effort made in this direction before long, and will do what he can to make it successful.

"MYSTERY CLUB" NOW AT CAPITOL

Members of Hollywood Film Colony Form Organization to Study Crime

Hollywood's most exclusive screen club was formed through accident. It is called "The Mystery Club," membership to which is eligible only to prominent players whose hobbies are the solving of mystery and detective problems, cryptograms, secret codes and the deciphering of ancient inscriptions.

During the making of "The Mystery Club," which is the title of the Universal-Jewel picture now playing at the Capitol theater, the members of the shadow organization discussed the subject of crimes and their solutions and discovered to their mutual delight that all were interested in that fascinating topic.

The result was the formation of the club which will soon be housed in sumptuous quarters in Laurel Canyon. The president, Matt Moore, is a collector of codes and is an adept in solving the most intricate of that form of enigmatic message.

Warner Orland is a noted authority on Hindu mysticism and the famous tricks and mysteries of the East; Nat Carr is a friend of Sir Arthur Conan Doyle and bases his love of the subject of detective mysteries on close association with the author of "Sherlock Holmes" while the actor was in England; Henry Hebert is a well-known Egyptologist and has to his credit the deciphering of several Egyptian cuneiform inscriptions that have baffled historians for years; Jovial Jed Prouty betrays his careless exterior and was discovered to be a dilettante of fingerprinting while Charles Lane, through his long residence in Florence, is an expert in old Italian documents which are difficult of translation owing to their being written in an Italo-Latin jargon, notably the Cenci letters and the Cellini documents.

MANHATTAN OPERA COMPANY COMING

Salem Only City Included in Trip From Portland to San Francisco

The Manhattan Grand Opera company of New York will stop on its tour between Portland and San Francisco for one night at the Elsthorpe theater in Salem on Monday, December 20, was confirmed yesterday by a telegram to Manager John C. Stille. This will be the only stop the company will make in going from Portland to San Francisco.

The opera selected for presentation here is Puccini's beautiful "Madam Butterfly," than which there is no more famous or popular opera extant, and the star is Mme. Tamaki Miura, the world-famed Japanese soprano, who is doubtless more distinguished in the title role of this opera than any other artist. She has sung this offering to crowded audiences all over the United States and in other parts of the world, and John Luther Long, author of the original story on which the opera is based, named her "The Ideal Madam Butterfly" ten years ago. The presentation here will be exactly the same in cast, production, orchestra and other details as that to be given on the preceding Saturday afternoon in Portland, including the introduction of the gorgeous Pavley Oukrainisky Russian Ballet, headed by Andreas Pavley, one of the most famous of male Russian dancers, four female premieres and with a corps of twenty, in a short ballet program immediately preceding the opera. On account of this added feature the curtain will go up at 8:15 precisely.

A most notable cast surrounds Mme. Miura in "Madam Butterfly," including Graham Marr, celebrated American baritone, formerly of the Boston, Chicago and Metropolitan opera companies; Geo. Braut, young American tenor who has been quite a sensation since his discovery last season; Ada Page, an Italian contralto who has impressed music lovers highly in Pacific coast cities in former tours; Yolanda Rinaldi, mezzo-soprano; Luigi Dallemolle, baritone; Joseph Cavadore, tenor buffo; and others, conducted by Aldo Franchetti, famous Italian musician and composer, who wrote the new Japanese opera, "Namiko San," which the Chicago Civic Opera company produced most successfully last year for Mme. Miura, and which is featured for the opening of the coming Portland series of performances by this big company.

Investing In Security

Security in your office is as vital to your business and as important to your peace-of-mind as is security in your home.

Around your home and those whom you love you throw every reasonable precaution of safety. You leave them during the hours of your absence with the satisfaction of having done everything within your power to protect them.

Have you done as much for your business, which is their livelihood as well as yours?

To install your offices in the new First National Bank Building is to provide your business with the utmost of security—security which no amount of insurance in less modern quarters can fully supply.

Insurance compensates, in a partial way, for the losses you may suffer from fire or other hazards of business today.

A modern building prevents such disasters. Concrete and steel in its walls and floors, steel window casements and sash, special safety doors at the stairways cutting off each floor from the others, and fully enclosed elevator shafts give the new First National Bank Building a fire-resisting construction far superior to any other in Salem.

Those same safety doors at each stairway entrance, closed after business hours when egress and ingress to and from the building is by the elevator, and under the scrutiny of the operators, safeguard your office from trespassers.

In the basement special storage vaults are provided for the use of tenants in the building for the storage of articles too large to be placed in the bank's safety deposit boxes.

A reservation of office space in the First National Bank Building is an investment in security for your business.

Among the presents you hang on the youngster's tree this Christmas there is one they will appreciate above all others. That is a United States National Savings Account.

As little as One Dollar will open an account—but just think how big it will look to each child on Christmas morn.

Then, too, it will encourage them to begin adding their own savings so as to make the account grow. And that's a mighty fine objective—don't you think so?
