Special Airplane May Be Needed for Tropics

COPENHAGEN. (AP)—A special flying machine will have to be devised for exploring wild tropical countries, said Hans H. Hoyte, pilot of Prof. Mathew Strling's New Guinea expedition in an interview published in the Java Rode of Batavia, on the eve of his sailing for Europe.

Hoyte, a Dane by birth, was on his way to his family home at Lundy, Denmark, but was stricken with typhoid fever enroute and died at Alexandria, Egypt. He had been employed for a number of years with the Jackey Aircraft Co. of Chicago.

Violent changes in climatic conditions such as experienced in New Guinea, Hoyte said, were fatal to any ordinary plane, although his machine had done great service on thirty flights transporting men and material in sometimes very trying circumstances. Finally, he had to leave it behind at one of the bases, with its floats smashed.
