THE HAPPY MAN—"Behold, happy is the man whom God correcteth; therefore despise not thou the chastening of the Almighty..."

WILL GET A SUGAR FACTORY

There is to be no halting in the work for a beet sugar factory in Salem—
And no cessation of the effort to get 1000 to 1500 acres of sugar beets grown next year, and 8000 acres in 1928, which will bring the factory.

This should be the concern of every person in this section—
It is the most important development work that can be done here, not excepting any.

Sugar beets will make a paying crop here on the right kind of land—
For the beets only. But still more important is the fact that growing sugar beets as a rotation crop will improve the soil—make it produce larger crops of other kinds—

And the by-products will boom dairying, live stock breeding generally, our poultry industry and all the other industries on the land.

The people of Salem could afford to give a bonus to the farmers of this section, to get the beet sugar industry started here.

Once started, it will take care of itself in the way of expansion.

THE CHERRY CITY OF THE WORLD

Salem was named "The Chery City of the World" by A. F. Hofer a number of years ago, when he was secretary of the Salem Commercial club, now the Salem Chamber of Commerce—

And Salem has lived up to that name and is capable of living more superbly and completely up to it; qualifying for the high honor by both quality and quantity production—

Though she has added a number of handles, as the loganberry center, the prune center, the flax center, the walnut and filbert center, the strawberry city, the mint city, the celery center, the poultry center, and a number of other distinctions through linking up with outstanding industries on the land the manufacturing and shipping and merchandising and banking facilities of the city.

All the great sweet cherries of commerce were originated in the Salem district—the Lambert, Bing, Black Republican and the Long Stemmed Waterhouse and several substitutes used for pollination purposes; all except the Royal Ann or Napoleon. And one authority includes the Royal Ann. Any way, the Royal Ann is brought to perfection here—

For the natural conditions are here; the right combination of soil and sunshine and showers. The growing of sweet cherries on a commercial scale, excepting for a few sections of Michigan, is confined to the Pacific coast; and the best cherry section of this coast is the Salem district; best in possibilities of both quality and quantity production on a given number of acres, and having the lowest priced lands adapted to cherry growing, and scores of thousands of surplus acres of such land.

The Cherrians, Salem's famous good will and booster organization, with their fine Cherrian band, typify the interest of this section in this industry.

The rules for successful sweet cherry growing in the Salem district are not many. Very briefly, they may be summarized:

- Use Mazzard stock, set in the orchard, for grafting.
Use pollinizers.
Keep honey bees.
Prune properly.
Spray when needed; and especially is this necessary in most years in the production of high quality black sweet cherries, like the Lamberts and Bings.

The Mazzard stock will keep away or make more easily controlled the gummosis.

There must be pollinizers, because all sweet cherries are self sterile.

Honey bees should be provided, because the pollen of the cherry blossoms is not carried by the wind. It must be carried by insects. Bees will do this; they will work for their board, willingly, and return you a profit besides.

Pruning will increase the spread of the limbs, and keep them nearer to the ground, within easy picking distance.

Disease control is well covered by the Oregon Agricultural college experts, in timely bulletins and circulars.

We can grow scores of thousands of tons more sweet cherries than we do, of the very finest quality produced on earth—

And the era of such production would come about quickly if congress could be induced to change the tariff rate on cherries from 2 cents a pound to 6 cents a pound; the rate that was asked for and should have been granted when the bill for the present act was under consideration. This would guarantee a fair price always for the Royal Ann cherries needed for maraschino manufacturing. The unfair competition from Italy, Spain and France gives the only hazard in the planting of an enormous new acreage of Royal Ann trees.

One of the avenues of great promise for the marketing of our cherries is the fresh fruit market of the big eastern cities, reached by cold storage shipments. This seems to justify enormous expansion in the black sweet cherry branch of the industry.

The necessity for the development of a gigantic bee industry here is now well recognized—for the pollenizing of the fruit blossoms. With ample late bee pasture, ours will be the best bee district known, and this is now being provided, with Grimm alfalfa, the white and sweet clovers, including the Hubam clover, and other suitable crops, giving the bees a long season for their work.

Roberta Risks It

CHAPTER THIRTY-NINE
After reporting the interview to Roberta on their way home, Piggy said with a chuckle: "He looked me over and quizzed me to his heart's content and didn't tumble. So that's all right. Nobody's going to suspect us now."

His chuckles deepened into laughter when Janet gave them her account of the invasion of their domestic sanctuary.

"Bully," he exclaimed. "They have swept and sifted us. We're safe."

Cecilia, whom he now saw for the first time since bandaging her ankle the night before, looked up at him with a tremulous smile from the couch where she was lying.

"Thanks to you! I don't know how I can ever thank—"
"Oh, rats!" Piggy interrupted, grinning at her. "Forget it! I've had the time of my life. Anyhow, you'd be there yet, if it hadn't been for Bob. It was her scheme. I didn't know a bonfire would scare them silly—and I never would have thought of those cats in a million years!"

He chortled joyously. "If you're so chock full of gratitude that you can't hold it, spill it on Bob. She's responsible."

Roberta shook her head. "No, Peter, you're the hero of this little tale," she said lightly, but with the mysterious something in her face that always set his heart hammering and gave him an insane and otherwise unprecedented desire of kiss her. "I may have thought of the cats, but you found them. You've done everything. I owe you a lot besides money."

She added, more soberly, "and there must be a lot of that."

"Oh, not so much. I've still got some left and the worst's over. All we have to do now is to sit tight until the tumult and the shouting dies. The rest's easy."

Wherein he failed to take account of several gathering forces, among them Clifford Nixon's recurrent memory of an elusive but haunting resemblance, the wide spreading ripple from a pebble of gossip carelessly thrown, and the power of the press.

The last of these was the first to manifest itself, for Nixon's assiduity in spreading the news of Cecilia's abduction among the peace officers of a dozen towns became known, and Scott's prominence, as a wealthy manufacturer multiplied the news value of the story. Consequently Boston reporters appeared upon the scene before night, and their New York brethren flocked in a few hours later, all sharp set to pounce upon every clue.

Scott locked his gates and loosed his dogs, conducting all business by telephone. The only persons admitted to the Birch-

"Nixon saw her the other day and recognized her."

"He did not! Jonesy, down at the store, told me all about that the same day. Nixon said she looked like some friend of his, so Jonesy told him who she was—where she came from an' everything—an' Nixon said she couldn't be the one. That's all there is to that. Go an' ask Jonesy yourself—or Nixon, either."

The reporter had already interviewed Jones. Fixing the other with a penetrating stare, he inquired suddenly:

"What does a young fellow like you dye his hair for?"

The heart of Percival Galahad Brazenous turned three complete somersaults before settling down to a rate approaching two hundred a minute, but his steady gray eyes never wavered and his grin looked humorous.

all colonies of bees. One secluded hive infected with brood can upset the most careful inspection of the larger apiaries, for bee diseases are decidedly infectious. The meeting adopted a motion to inform the county assessor of Marion county of the law so that he can instruct his deputies to list all bee hives.

The beekeepers agreed that a minimum inspection fee of $2.50 would be fair. The charge per hive would be 10 cents for inspection where there are more than 25 hives. This will put the inspection work on a fee basis and do away with the present license. It will no longer be necessary for the county court to reappropriate the license money or any other

ATTEMPT ROBBERY OF AURORA STORE
Burglar Alarm Set Off and Man Found in Act of Filling Suitcase

Attempted robbery of an Aurora store early yesterday morning caused the arrest of H. M. Jackson on a burglary charge, little more than a month after he had been released from the state penitentiary on a similar charge.

Jackson broke into the store at Aurora owned by G. W. Sadler and A. W. Krause, and began to fill a suitcase with merchandise.

He set off a burglar alarm when he broke through the front door, however, and one of the proprietors, accompanied by a constable, found him in the act of filling his suitcase.

Jackson surrendered without resistance, and was brought to justice court in this city yesterday.

He waived preliminary hearing and was bound over to the grand jury.

Jackson was released from the state penitentiary November 19 after completing a three year term for burglary. He was committed from Baker county.

He is also said to have served time in San Quentin prison.

Bits For Breakfast
Salem is the cherry city—
The cherry city of the world, and becoming more so all the time. It's the climate; the soil, sunshine and showers, and the know how.

The campaign for sugar beet acreage, and for the best sugar factory, will go on. How long? Till success crowns the efforts.

Whatever is necessary to be done to stabilize and enormously increase the bee industry here must be done. This is necessary in the fruit industry, for pollination. And it will become a great industry in itself.

Portland Chamber of Commerce says in a current bulletin that Eugene Hoyt, an Illinois man, is coming to Oregon to invest $20,000 in a walnut orchard, and to make his home.

Also A. L. MacLeod of Illinois is to come and invest up to $20,000 in a farm to breed Guernseys or Jerseys. The Salem district is the place for both these men.

Talking about walnut land, the owner of the Sky Line orchard had that property for sale. But he visited Salem and the farm a week or so ago, and remained several days and decided that he will not sell Sky Line. He will keep it. It is a wonderful property, and growing in value and will so grow every year for a century or more.

Present conditions are certainly funds to pay the inspector.

The present law provides for the elimination of disease through destruction where curative methods fail after the owner has been notified by the inspector. The committee decided to change that to give the inspector legal opportunity to act where there are diseases discovered that might spread quickly. The amendment would allow the inspector a flat fee for "cleaning up the hives" after he had notified the owner of the presence of disease and the owner had not the training necessary to correct conditions himself.

The committee resolved to ask the legislature for an annual appropriation of $3000 to be placed with the extension service at Oregon Agricultural college to provide salary and expenses for expert supervision of the bee inspectors in the various counties by an expert of the college department of entomology. By making the work of the inspectors educational it will be possible to eradicate the beekeeper who is now ignorant of the afflictions that make his apiary profitless to himself and dangerous to others.

The committee decided that the term county bee inspector smacked of law enforcement too much when their purpose is to educate. They will change the title to county apiarist. The college expert in charge would bear the title of state apiarist.
