asked permission to proceed with its building unless the Southern Pacific would make additional concessions. The Southern Pacific, in turn, explained its unwillingness to grant the conditions of the Oregon Trunk.

The Oregon commission was asked to respond within 15 days to a request for a statement of its views, whereupon the interstate commerce commission will act upon the issue finally.

The Oregon public service commission in a telegram sent recently to the interstate commerce commission at Washington, has requested that no final action be taken in the Central Oregon railroad development case until such time as the local commission has WARSHIPS RUSHED TO been given an opportunity to be

"Press reports indicate," read the telegram, "that the carriers are required to file within a few days final reports concerning results of negotiations in the Oregon rail construction case. "On behalf of the state of Oregon we request that we be furnished with copies of the reports and that no final determination be had thereon until we have an opportunity for supplemental argument before the entire commission based on such reports and existing record if our examination of such reports indicate the necessity.

'We urge that such argument be had as soon after filing of reports as practicable, and there be no unnecessary delay in this much needed rail construction.'

Governor Pierce joined in the elegram, with the result that the following reply was received at the in Nicaragua in 1912, when they executive department from Clyde E. Aitchison, a member of the interstate commerce commission.

The telegram was prepared by the public service commission when it was found that the Hill lines and Southern Pacific company were unable to agree on common user privileges, and that the former corporation had requested permission of the interstate commerce commission to construct an independent line from Bend to Klamath Falls.

Members of the Oregon public service commission explained today that their only interest in the case was to protect the citizens of Oregon, and obtain for the state the railroad development outlined by the commission more than two years ago.

Madame OREGON SCHOOLS Kalich has been called "the Bernhardt of America," but there is a title that she likes even better harking back to the days in the Bowery of New York city, and Madame was accompanied by Marie and Max, both of which her daughter, a piquantly lovely parts were extraordinarily well girl named Lillian. The two are inseparable. Lillian has received the plot, as did the comic figure her formal education in New York of Aunt Francisca of the rasping city and at Bryn Mawr college.

As we of the press waited in the theater lobby yesterday afternoon for the world's greatest dramatic actress to arrive for her interview, Madame's daughter divulged someship that exists between them. Madame Kalich surrounded herself with a superb cast which was like a segment from life at the 2300 close of the 19th century. The action in the four acts all took place within the living room of the German home.

The struggle swerved around the problem of an illegitimate child which was more precious to his mother than any of the conventions the stern, authoritative father upheld. She refused marriage to the child's father, maintaining only a great gratitude to him because he had made her a woman; in betraying her had caused her to struggle and realize all the power within her. Having been true to herself, she recognized no higher obligation, and her return home caused her father's death.

Madame Kalich as the tragedienne is without peer, and a return engagement at the Elsinore s anticipated.

Madame was greeted with a furore of applause which has been accorded no other artist at this theater. So insistent, and so re-
