scribes the success of the event as follows: "The hall was crowded to capacity, every available bit of standing room being taken. Persons crowded around the balcony and behind the stage and at Mr. Sandburg's suggestion many took seats on the edge of the platform and on the stage behind the speaker. Those who came later crowded around the edges of the hall and sat on the floor in front of the stage."

Werrenrath Concert Is Signal for Record House at Elsinore

One of the reasons for the continued success of Reinold Werrenrath, the popular American baritone in the concert field, and his ability to repeat his concerts frequently, not only in New York where he gives two annually, but throughout the country, is that he is constantly studying, seeking new material, and is never quite satisfied with his work...

Mr. Werrenrath will sing here on Tuesday at the Elsinore, and his concert is always a signal for a sell-out.

State Meeting of Daughters of the American Revolution Held in Portland

Daughters of the American Revolution from various parts of Oregon assembled in Portland yesterday to attend the annual luncheon of Multnomah chapter, which was addressed by the state regent, Mrs. Gordon MacCracken of Astland.

The meeting was held in Multnomah hotel. Mrs. Mabel Holmes Parsons, a member of Multnomah chapter, gave an interesting talk on "Ancestors—More or Less."

The growing scope of the work and the ideals of the Daughters were explained by Mrs. MacCracken to the 75 women present.

The organization voted $50 to the scholarship fund for the Tanashee school in South Carolina; $20 to the D. A. R. work on Angel Island; and small sums to other projects the organization is helping finance.

Mrs. Octav J. Goffin, regent of Multnomah chapter, and a large group of members will represent the chapter at the state conference in Corvallis in March.

A new chapter of the Children of the American Revolution will be sponsored by Multnomah chapter, and Mrs. James G. Walker Jr., state director, presented Mrs. H. B. Moore, as organizing president of the new group.

with undiminished enthusiasm wherever they have appeared.

According to the Salt Lake City Desert News the following is true of the drama: "Outward Bound" is an unusual, remarkable play. The action takes place on a mysterious ship. The passengers are Pifer, a drunkard; the Rev. William Duke; Ann and Henry, a pair of lovers; Mrs. Clivenden-Banks, a society baroness; Mrs. Midget, a charwoman; Lingley, an unscrupulous business man, and Scrubby, the "half-way."

Not until the ship has been out of the harbor a whole day do the passengers realize that they are all dead, and that the mysterious ship, with Scrubby its only crew and attendant, is outward bound, carrying them to heaven and to hell.

This situation, as may be imagined, creates most interesting developments and introduces episodes ranging from the ludicrous to the tragic. It is all highly imaginative, yet provocative of earnest thought.

The Moroni Olsen Players in their long list of successful productions have perhaps never offered a more balanced and altogether excellent presentation. An outstanding feature, as usual, is the notably fine work of Miss Janet Young, who has the role of the charwoman. To this character she gives an impressive and appealing portrayal, and in the denouement of her characterization she rises to real heights of dramatic power. Mr. Olsen does not have quite as great an opportunity as usual to show the full measure of his own ability, yet he makes of Lingley, the unscrupulous business man, an unforgettable character, and to all the details of his delineation he gives a finished touch.

The work of Joseph H. Williams as Scrubby, deserves special commendation. It is the finest of all of Mr. Williams' impersonations thus far. Byron Fouquier as the drunkard measures up to the high standard we have come to expect of him. Miss Leora Thatcher, as always, contributes noteworthy to the success of the presentation.

In her portrayal of Mrs. Clivenden-Banks she does some excellent acting. In the difficult role of the suicide lover, Dorothy Adams and Harry R. Allen show exceptional sincerity and effectiveness. Gordon Nelson, as the Rev. William Duke, and Harry Nelson, as the Rev. Frank Thompson, acquit themselves most creditably, completing a cast of balance and of ability.

The settings were designed by Harry R. Allen and executed by Joseph Williams.

Salt Lake patrons of the drama will regret that the Moroni Olsen Players are not coming again this season. They always bring us something worth while. In play selection, personnel and presentation, they maintain a high standard, catering to a discriminating taste and refusing to be carried away by any clamor for the cheap and the commonplace. This usual repertoire company has firmly established itself throughout the inter-mountain section and the northwest. An even wider recognition is assured them should they ever wish to enlarge their field of activity.

Mrs. H. C. Conner Writes of Experiences in Mexico

A letter from Mrs. H. C. Conner of Salem, who is spending the winter in Southern California, relates her experience upon her first visit to Mexico last Sunday. She says: "Upon arriving at the border line at Mexcala we were relieved of our cameras by an officer. We crossed the border and entered a car just as two earthquake shocks were recorded. We made our exit rather quietly than we entered, and for the next hour's sight-seeing walked down the middle of the streets, well out of reach of any brick or adobe walls that might tumble. Not very favorably impressed with the town from any standpoint."

Mrs. Arletta M. Page Is Hostess for West Central Circle

Twenty-four members of the West Central circle of the First Methodist church were entertained on Wednesday afternoon at the home of Mrs. Arletta M. Page at her home, 760 N. Church street.

The meeting was one of the most delightful the group has had. Mrs. D. W. Fisher entertained with Mrs. Page. The two were assisted by Mrs. Page's daughter, Mrs. G. H. Alden.

Mrs. Page and Mrs. Fisher served as hostesses at this particular meeting because January is their birth-month.

Mrs. I. L. McAdams, president of the circle, presided. Mrs. Patterson had charge of the devotions.

The circle made plans for a series of three cooked food sales, the first of which will be given a week from Saturday, at a place to be announced later. Mrs. Grant Day and Mrs. Almira Hale will be in charge of the first sale.

At the next meeting of the West Central circle, in February, Mrs. W. C. Winstow will entertain.

Mallinson Prints for Spring Paris is accenting Prints for Spring. But there are prints and prints with as much variation as that existing between an old master and a chromo. Mallinson Prints are universally acclaimed old masters—in technique, in authenticity of design and in their arresting quality. Daringly different, original but never garish; inspiring and aspiring; dramatic yet always artful; topical but to fashion ever amendable; color blends unusual but sophisticated, Mallinson Prints are always leaders. The fine in art from every land and every artist has inspired the Mallinson Prints. No one influence, no one period, no one school has been slavishly followed, but the best, the most authentic, the most sophisticated and the most fashion amendable has been adapted in a veritable picture gallery of Mallinson Masterpieces. To see a collection of Mallinson Prints is to realize the long way prints have traveled to arrive at the remarkable heights acknowledged by artists and lovers of the beautiful everywhere. The greatest achievement ever is the world-wide verdict on the American National Park Series. The natural masterpieces of our American Parks have suggested a series of twelve Prints as impressive in their silky way. To transcribe to silk—as in the American National Park Series—the curious natural wonders and the rare exotic beauty of these world-renowned Parks in all their richness and subtlety of coloring is, indeed, an achievement that represents the very peak of commercial art. American in inspiration—American in conception—American in execution—the American National Park Series cannot fail to arouse the enthusiastic delight of American women appreciative of the beautiful and the unusual.
