committed suicide. Mr. Prior, a moody young dysmaniac, who is the first one to see that he and his companions are dead; Mrs. Cliveden-Banks, a matron whose first concern is social caste; Rev. William Duke, a young clergyman who believes in being as human as a stock broker about his job; Mrs. Midget, a worn but unimpaired charwoman who is later revealed as the mother of Prior; and Mr. Lingley, of Lingley, Ltd., a self-made millionaire.

From this company and their strange circumstances — first amusing, and then pitiful — the author makes his play one of the most interesting, novel, and sincerely moving entertainments of this or any other season.

A play of such nobility as to call forth the best from its actors, whenever and however performed.

Mrs. Simeral and Mrs. Homer Ingrey Are Entertained On Friday Afternoon

Mrs. R. W. Simeral, who has gone to Camas, Wash., to make her home, and Mrs. Homer Ingrey, who will leave the first of the month to live in Portland, shared honors on Friday afternoon when Mrs. W. A. Cummings and Mrs. Clifford Taylor entertained at Mrs. Cummings' home, 1557 N. Winter street.

Each honor guest was presented with a gift. At the tea hour delicious refreshments were served. Those invited for the afternoon included: Mrs. Ingrey, Mrs. Simeral, Mrs. William Yarnell, Mrs. H. R. White, Mrs. E. M. Hansen, Mrs. H. E. King, Mrs. Walter Eberhardt, Mrs. Joe Madison, Mrs. William Brizette, Mrs. Clarence Townsend, Mrs. Dan Fleener, Mrs. R. G. Henderson, Mrs. Irene St. Helens, Mrs. A. L. Williamson, Mrs. P. W. Hubbard, Mrs. W. F. Drager, Mrs. Jud West, Mrs. George Viesko, Mrs. Fred Swanson, Mrs. O. E. Noes, Mrs. C. C. Chaffee, Mrs. A. H. Bunn, Mrs. Herbert Nash, Mrs. W. E. Chadwick, Mrs. Saunders, Mrs. Richard Van Pelt, Mrs. M. C. Pettys, Mrs. H. G. Loveland, Mrs. Daisy McIntyre, Mrs. C. L. Ingstrom, Mrs. W. W. Willamette University Classical Club Entertained at Chapel

The Classical club of Willamette University gave an impressive program Wednesday morning, Jan. 19, at the regular chapel period in Waller Hall. Doris Kilmitt, Irene Ritchie, Wendell Keck, and Lyle Weed were in charge of the program and it was directed by Mary McKee.

Malcolm Medler furnished the music.

Four tableaux taken from classical myth depicting "The Punishment of Niobe," "Atlas," "Orpheus and Eurydice," and "The Three Fates" were presented. Appropriate organ music was played which helped to interpret the spirit of each tableau. Two announcers, draped as Grecian mummies, stood on each side of the platform and briefly explained each picture. Their sepulchral voices, like the scenes which they described, seemed to come from a remote past. It was as though the dead lived for a brief moment to point out the beauty of a far, other age when the gods inhabited Mount Olympus and loved and noted even as human beings.

Informal Education in Architecture Continues in Art Catechism

Much interest has been aroused by the questions and their subsequent answers which have been published from week to week in the pages of The Statesman concerning architecture. The newest group of questions submitted for release are as follows, with answers in reserve for next Sunday:

1. What was the origin of early Christian architecture?

2. Previous to the adoption and use of this style, where had the Christians of Rome worshipped?

3. What are the characteristics of this style?

4. How does its ornament differ in motif from Greco-Roman?

5. Where are the best examples now found in other countries?

6. Are there any examples of this style found in Salem?

EMPLOYERS SEEK TALL SALES GIRLS

High Altitude Gives Women Commanding Presence Before New Customers

BOSTON, Jan. 22.—(AP)—Although the salaries of sales girls in this hub of culture are not yet measured by their height, nevertheless it has been revealed that department store owners here place a premium on tallness.

Miss Susan J. Ginn, director of vocational guidance in the public schools, made the disclosure. She was discussing the never ending search of employers for the smile that wins and other attributes of good selling personality.

"Girls of commanding presence are in greatest demand," said Miss Ginn, "for personality is a big asset. Customers seem to have more confidence in the tall, mature type of girl. Tall girls are also preferred because those of shorter stature might easily be hidden behind a counter piled high with goods. However, one of the most successful salesgirls I ever knew was shorter than the average and had to make up for it by standing on a box."

"The demand for trained workers is increasing also because customers rely on the clerks more and more. Customers need to know that difference between pure wool and shoddy, but now they depend on the salesgirls to tell them and to help make selections."
