"Faust," which is showing at the Capitol theater today, for the last time, is a picture of unusual merit. It is a film to remember always. It has the virility of melodrama, the persuasive quality of tomance, and the momentum of life.

The story is age-old, having son for many years before Goethe been handed down from father to and Marlowe conveyed it to type, and much longer before Goundd compo ed his famous opera from the same legends. It is the age-old story of the struggle between the spine legends. It is the age old story of the struggle between good and evil, of temptation and virtue, and of the triumph of love.
