TUNNEL CREWS MEET

TWO-THIRDS OF GREAT NORTHERN BORE COMPLETED

ST. PAUL, March 4.—(AP)—Two-thirds of the Great Northern railway's 8-mile tunnel through the Cascade mountains was completed today, when crews met underground between Berne and the Mill creek shaft.

Word that the crews had "holed out" was received late today at the office of Ralph Budd, president of the Great Northern. The last barrier was blasted away at 11:45 a. m., Pacific coast time.

The Mill creek shaft is 2.4 miles west of Berne, and work on the tunnel now can be continued only on two faces—westward from the shaft and eastward from scenic.

The tunnel will be 41,143 feet long; the longest railway tunnel in America, and the fourth longest in the world, and 26,382 of it has been dug. Work started on Nov. 26, 1925, and three years were allowed for completion, but it is expected it will be finished some months ahead of schedule.

CONGRESS ENDS WITH FILIBUSTER IN SENATE

snarled through three and a half hours and steadfastly refused to let down the bars for passage of any legislation making appropriations for government activities which the congress previously had approved.

The campaign funds resolution, the wrangle-over which kept the senate in continuous session for a 37 hours' period ending last midnight, failed as did the second deficiency and two public buildings bills, one providing funds to initiate the vast construction program authorized last year.

Crowds which overflowed the galleries sat tensely and expectantly as effort after effort was made to get the deficiency bill through. Turbulent scenes were enacted on the floor as leaders pleaded with and condemned those who stubbornly refused the necessary unanimous consent.

Once above the uproar Vice President Dawes declared the bill passed, but Senator Howell, republican insurgent, Nebraska, rushed down the center aisle, protesting at the top of his voice. Dawes quickly rescinded his action amid shouts from senators for the enrolling of the bill so it might go to the president.

As the adjournment hour approached the confusion in the senate increased, presenting a picture in bold contrast to that in the house chamber, where business had been concluded and retiring members were making farewell speeches.

The house proceedings were interrupted to rush through a resolution to care for some of the major items in the deficiency measure, but the senate, upon receiving it, kicked it around as it had the parent measure.

Previously, the senate's patriarch, Warren of Wyoming, had admonished the senate that nothing could be done if each member insisted upon having "his own damn way."

During the closing round of the senate's struggle, President Coolidge sat in his private room just off the floor, where in a calm atmosphere he studied and signed 28 bills which seeped through the legislative mill.

Mr. Coolidge was surrounded by members of his cabinet, who advised him on the measures submitted for his approval. He returned to the White House within a few minutes after the senate adjourned and while the house still was in session.

Before departing he was waited upon by the republican and democratic leaders of the two houses, to whom he conveyed the word that he had no further communications to make to the 69th congress and official reports of this fact were made in both chambers.

Later, at the White House, it was said in the president's behalf that he considered the work done by congress had been generally satisfactory to the country.

Among the more notable achievements of the 69th congress, as the president sees it, was the passage of the McFadden branch banking bill, the measure to regulate radio, and the bill establishing the federal board of mediation in railroad labor controversies.

BIGAMIST TELLS ABOUT MARRYING 12 WIVES

though the bridegroom devoted enough time to her to impress Miss Torgenson with his kindness to his elderly relative, he still found time to woo his new flame with ardor.

By the time the boat reached San Pedro Kearney and Miss Torgenson were on very good terms. At Los Angeles Kearney told both women that he had a great deal of business to transact. He represented himself as a bond dealer, and declared that he had large sums owing him which he wanted to collect.

The business made a good excuse for leaving the bride alone in the day time. Then he continued wooing Miss Torgenson. At night he visited the bride, describing the trouble he was having to collect the bills. He married Miss Torgenson New Year's eve.

Kearney is held for the authorities of Utah as he is charged with a burglary in that state. An accomplice in this burglary is now serving time.

Kearney talks nonchalantly of a long career of jail sentences, penitentiary terms, and wrestling and prize fighting feats that it will take the police some time to check up. Several of the marriages have been proven, however, but none of the wives have come forward to offer him aid. On the contrary one wife, Mrs. Kitty McMannus, who divorced him seven years ago,

ORAL EXPRESSION VERY USEFUL ART

Oratory Comes by Hard Labor; Highest and Most Difficult Art

Far from being dead, oratory or the art of oral expression is being practiced more today than ever before because of the demands of democratic institutions. Rev. Norman K. Tully, pastor of the Presbyterian church, declared in an address at the Lions club luncheon Friday noon.

Prediction that the increase in number and circulation of periodicals would take the place of speech making have proven the reverse of true, Rev. Tully said. They have merely enlarged the number of hearers. The printed word cannot fill the place of the spoken word, partly because it cannot utilize the human voice, and partly because the writer lacks the inspiration which an audience gives to a speaker.

The two fundamental secrets of successful oratory were defined by Rev. Tully as first, "know your subject" and second, "mean what you say."

Oratory is the highest and most difficult of arts, and comes by hard labor rather than as a hereditary or natural gift he declared.
