M. Paul Poiret's prediction that w.thin 30 years women would be "in trousers," spurred the suffrage leader to challenge the thought of the French style leader. The prediction of M. Poiret, she says, fails to "startle" her. In the first place, trousers were originally a female garment, "and without apology, were deliberately stolen by men."

"A more exciting question is: "Will the London trust put men hack into their own skirts?" she

"Women are just awakening to the inaptness of the styles you provide, M. Poiret," she warns, "and
