from the river for 130 miles from the coast out to the world. They painted a grim picture in the terse language of official naval advice.

The break came just after Nanking had passed from military control of the northern Chinese faction to the hands of advancing Cantonese troops. Reports from Shanghai told of remnants of the northern army cut off and penned in against the city wall.

Apparently the first outbreak came within the city of Nanking as American Consul John K. Davis was desperately gathering American nationals for refuge under guard of American sailors on Socony Hill, at the edge of the city but two miles or more from the river.

It is the plant of the Standard Oil company, one of the two big American establishments at Nanking, and was picked as a place possible of defense against a mob.

Meanwhile rioting and looting had broken out in the city. The official reports made it clear that Cantonese troops were involved.

"During the afternoon Cantonese troops looted the American, British and Japanese consulates, wounded the British consul and are reported to have killed the Japanese consul." Admiral Hough said in a radiogram sent soon after his arrival at Nanking, on the river gunboat Isabel, flagship of the Yangtze river patrol force.

In the river lay the American destroyers Noa and Preston and the British cruiser Emerald. But before Admiral Hough arrived on the scene, the mob and undisciplined troops had turned on the foreigners on Socony Hill. The first official word came from Admiral Williams at Shanghai.

"Foreigners on Socony Hill at Nanking were attacked, he said. "The British cruiser Emerald and the United States destroyers Noa and Preston shelled the area around the hill to protect foreigners." Landing forces were sent to attempt the rescue from the hill.

The next was from Hough at Nanking direct.

"The Noa and Preston have ceased heavy gunfire and the Emerald has sent a landing force to the wall under the Standard Oil company's house while the Emerald covered the landing with shrapnel," his message said. "The Noa and Preston meanwhile cleared the mud (waterfront) and foreshore of snipers, by firing from the ships.

"The landing forces successfully brought off all the foreigners from the Standard Oil company's house including the American consul, his family, and all American naval personnel. One American sailor was slightly wounded. The Noa and Preston were hit many times during the day."

A later message from Hough revealed the cost of the outbreak in American lives.

"A number of American civilians have been killed and wounded," he said. "This number is uncertain, but it is feared it is large. The missions have been looted.

"The Americans left in Nanking comprise 45 women, 20 children and 90 men. The fate of these is uncertain."

Throughout the remainder of the day government officials waited with foreboding for word of what that fate had been. It had not come late tonight. Instead came a further report from Hough of the stern warning given the Chinese authorities.

"Negotiators have been brought aboard the Emerald and negotiations have been concluded," he said. These demands:

"First, immediate protection of all foreigners, and foreign property.

"Second, reporting on board the Emerald of the Cantonese general in command before tonight to negotiate respecting the outrage, all foreigners to be brought to the bund under escort by tomorrow.

"If these demands are not complied with, Nanking will be treated as a military area."

With William J. Cameron, editor of the Dearborn Independent, upon the witness stand for the fifth day, Sapiro's counsel asked whether he recalled any article as to "individual Jews."

Cameron replied negatively, and William Henry Gallagher, attorney for Sapiro, produced reprints in bound volumes, of articles which appeared in the Independent between 1920 and 1922. They bore the title "The International Jew."

Cameron's memory was refreshed by being shown the reprints, and he then testified that he remembered the articles.

He denied that he ever had discussed any individual Jew with the motor manufacturer, but later amended it to explain that upon one occasion he had discussed an article in the Independent regarding Baruch's testimony at the congressional investigation of the war industries board.

The defense objected, however, and the answer was stricken from the record as not in response to the question asked.

Gallagher declined to seek the introduction of the bound volumes as evidence. Defense counsel then sought to force him to take that step.

Judge Raymond demanded to know what the plaintiff's counsel sought to prove by referring to the books rather than introducing them as evidence.

"Henry Ford's knowledge of and acquiescence in the policy of this newspaper," Gallagher replied, in a resounding voice from the far end of the jury box.

Cameron still was a very difficult witness for Gallagher with his own cleverness in giving unwished answers and the ability of Stewart Hanley of Ford counsel in interposing successful objections. Hanley objected to virtually every question asked, as he had for four days.

Will Install Drainage Tile at Cross Street

Steps to solve the drainage problem in the block between 12th and 13th streets on Cross will probably be effected, according to Street Commissioner Walter Low who plans to install 36-inch concrete drainage tile this spring. After a hard rain, Cross street at this point has, in the past, been a full fledged stream with water running well over a foot in depth. By making concrete tile during the winter months, Street Commissioner Low is able to save the city nearly half the cost of tile purchased outside.
