

SIDE LIGHTS OF THE STAGE and SCREEN

Elsmore Theater
Fanchon and Marco have a novel "idea" this week in their presentation which opens today at the Elsmore theater. It is called "The Wanderer" and offers a trip around the world in song and dance. Its four scenes shifting to as many countries lends opportunity for some colorful settings and striking costumes. Each new geographical location has a different feature star.

Chief Eagle Feather, noted Indian singer, is the feature in "Wandering in America." Earnest Charles, tenor and recent star of "Will Morrissey's Revue" and "Monkey Business" is the "Wanderer" in British South Africa. Miss Joyce, dainty entertainer, is the "Wanderer" in Paris and the real hit of the show, Ben Ne One, a Chinese comedian of remarkable personality and humor, is the "Wanderer" in the Orient.

The other attraction of the revue that has been getting many press comments in California is the "Sunkist Ballet" of girls from the golden state who possess more than a natural share of beauty and charm.

All the principals and the bevy of pretty girls combine in an international finale that is a blaze of color and music.

The photoplay feature is Dolores Costello in "The Third Degree" a play in which she is supported by Marie Dressler and a picked cast. It is a gripping story of mother love, and sacrifice and, though offering heavy drama in parts, has a satisfactory ending. It is of the Stella Dallas type, a picture worth seeing.

Capitol Theater
A colored revue, big feature on the Sun's Eastern Vaudeville bill, will appear at the Bligh's Capitol theater this afternoon and evening.

Red hot music, pep songs, snappy dancing, that is what's in store for you at the Capitol today. The Sunset Revue, topping the bill, is a real wow when it comes to speed. This is a combination of the seven fastest working colored entertainers in vaudeville presenting a typical "Night in a Darktown Cafe" and offering the last word in music.

Bassett and Bailey, jugglers of furniture and human beings, present a neat bit of athletic novelty, while Al Rags Boeckel the Greenwich Stroller has a bright artistic treat of "Paintless Pictures."

Mae Saltmarsh is a versatile young lady equally as proficient with vocal numbers as she is with tuneful selections on the trombone, on which she features specialties and novelty solos.

The real comedy punch is offered by those deans of laughter Conroy and Mack, the inventors of fun in their latest comedy concoction, "A Fool There Is" which they offer with no apologies to "Shakespeare" and which is just the exploits of two boys from good families gone wrong. The screen offering for today will be Ralph Lewis in "The Silent Power." Viola Vercler Holman and her Capitol concert orchestra are offering another musical hit.

Oregon Theater
Wallace Beery, the cleverest of screen comedians, scored again yesterday at the opening of "Casey at the Bat," which is to play the Oregon theater today and for the continuation of its local showing. Beery stands alone among ex-ponents of photoplay laughter. His memorable work in "Behind the Front" and "We're in the Navy Now" was eclipsed in this, his latest comedy feature. There is something in Beery's character that lends itself naturally and without any effort, to comedy. In the role of the ignorant, awkward baseball player, "Casey" he is a riot to those who love to laugh. The play furnishes plenty of situations that make for comedy and is without doubt Beery's best effort.

That problem would be settled by diplomatic means, "at the proper time and place."

Hollywood Theater
Fads, fancies and follies of the feminine, following fashion's latest decrees of both the "intime" and drawing room variety, play their active and interesting parts in the photoplay "Stella Dallas," which shows at the Hollywood theater March 27-28.

"Stella Dallas," adapted by Frances Marion from Olive Higgins Prouty's novel, has been called a woman's picture attractive to men and women.

Its story deals with the romantic love-life of a girl, Stella, at eighteen, twenty-five and thirty-five. It pictures the urgings and surgings of her heart and reveals in both vivid and imaginative outline the resultant drama occasioned by her yearnings and her conflict with convention.

Her romance, her marriage, her flirtations, her beautiful child, her advent into society, and her final realization of all she could give for happiness, are the romantic highlights of this photodrama of American life, directed by that master of sympathetic interpretation, Henry King, and sponsored by Samuel Goldwyn, as his first picture for United Artists Corporation.

All of fashion's aids to make beauty more beautiful enter into the scheme of the drama. Gorgeous gowns worn by Ailee Joyce, who plays Helen Morrison, and the wedding costume of Lois Moran, who plays Laurel, are said to be ravishing to the eye.

Evening gowns, street wear, hats, all of latest mode and trim form a veritable parade for feminine delight.

Belle Bennett, who plays the title role of Stella, employs paint, powder, mascara, jewels, permanent wavers, wrinkle removers and an array of feminine adjuncts that everyone readily associates with the kind of a girl Stella is.

Nanking Crisis Over
With the evacuation of all the remaining Americans from Nanking, the crisis in that city is apparently ended. One killed and four injured constitutes the American toll of casualties, as far as known.

Dr. J. E. Williams, American vice president of Nanking university, whose death was reported in previous dispatches, was shot by a Cantonese soldier who had just participated in the looting of his home.

Those injured were Miss Anna E. Moffet, a missionary worker, shot twice by Cantonese troops; Marine Private Plumley, Earl T. Hobart, manager of the Standard Oil plant on Secony Hill, where one band of refugees were besieged by Cantonese until relieved by the Anglo-American naval gunfire, and an unnamed American bluejacket.

Women Mistreated
American women were treated brutally by the Cantonese soldiery, but with the exception of the shooting of Miss Moffet, who is expected to recover, the offenses apparently were limited to insults and rough handling.

On the other hand, Japanese women and children were outraged and assaulted, and at least two of their men folk were shot or bayoneted in vain efforts to protect them.

The American marines who had been sent ashore to guard the consulate acquitted themselves splendidly, and accompanied the Socony Hill refugees safely out of Nanking to the warships in the river.

Refugees arriving here were fervent in their praise of the navy men, declaring: "The navy saved us. Without it every foreigner would have been murdered."

Sailors Act Heroic
One of the outstanding incidents was the heroic action of an American sailor, who, when the refugees were huddled on Socony Hill, surrounded by mobs of looting Cantonese, stood on the roof of the Standard Oil building, amid a hail of bullets and gave the signal which brought into play the big guns on the warships.

One of the American ships was the first to open fire, and the shell bursting a few yards from the besieging Cantonese soldiers, scattered them and allowed the refugees their chance to get to the river.

Japanese sources at Nanking, giving a graphic account of the sacking of the Japanese consulate, say that early Thursday a force of 150 uniformed Cantonese besieged and looted the consulate, meanwhile firing at refugees and manhandling the women folk.

The consul, who was ill abed, was assaulted and two officials were stabbed with bayonets. The looters, who tried to burn down the building, took everything they were able to lay their hands on, but desisted on the arrival of a Kuomintang official whose aid was invoked by telephone.

The Catholic church at Nanking, these sources said, was looted and burned.

Comrade Club Administers Overwhelming Defeat to Visitors

The First Christian church of Portland basketball team returned last night after a stinging 49 to 9 defeat at the hands of the Comrade club team of the First Presbyterian church of Salem. The game was played in the Salem YMCA gymnasium.

The Portland team won the championship of the Inter-Church league there, but was unable to hold their own here last night. The Salem Presbyterians presented a team which most high schools of the state would have been glad to claim, so little more than the resulting score could be expected. A return game will be played in Portland April 8.

The Knight Memorial church pioneer club defeated the Christian church Portland pioneer club 16 to 13 in a tight preliminary. The same teams played in the afternoon, Salem winning 19 to 13.

Hotel Chefs Devise Hot Hors d'Oeuvre in London

LONDON.—(AP)—A new delicacy, or series of delicacies—the hot hors d'oeuvre—have been introduced to London.

Fourteen chefs at a leading hotel have each evolved six hot hors d'oeuvre dishes. In the preparation of these dishes 230 ingredients have been used, including fish, birds, eggs, vegetables, and strange fruit from all over Europe and North Africa.

The dishes are served to the hotel guests and the inventor of those that prove to be most popular will receive a handsome reward.

Old Designs Depict Presidential Uniform

PARIS.—(AP)—France once considered a special costume for its presidents.

The republic has been reminded of the fact by the recent sale of old designs for the presidential costumes of Felix Faure, president in the nineties. M. Faure had them made for a trip to Russia where he wished to appear in special "president's dress." A long coat and short court trousers was the model he chose.

But the president's advisors objected to the undemocratic idea of a special dress for the head of the republic and the clothes were never made up.
