PRICE FIXING CHARGED

Credit Bureau Head Denies Violation of Sherman Law

SEATTLE, March 29.—(AP)—The Northwest Shoe Finders' Credit bureau has "always endeavored to live within the law," declared James Alexander Duncan, manager, in commenting upon a complaint filed in federal court today charging the concern with operating in violation of the Sherman anti-trust law and fixing prices to manufacturers.

"I believe we have done so," he said. "The bureau is simply what its name implies, a credit bureau, and it has done no price fixing." The concern, which includes in its membership many shoe dealers in the Pacific northwest, is charged in the complaint with having agreed to eliminate all competition, fixed sale and credit terms among themselves, agreed on prices to be charged shoe manufacturers, and coerced eastern dealers into refusal to sell materials to western manufacturers.

TWO MEMBERS RESIGN FROM GAME COMMISSION

commission and the state game commission.

John C. Veach of Portland would not be affected by the governor's action for the reason that he retired voluntarily from the state fish commission two weeks ago.

The resignations of neither Mr. Eakin nor J. S. Hayes, also a member of the state fish commission, had been received at the executive department tonight. It was expected, however, that they would be received within the next couple of days.

Both Mr. Eakin and Mr. Hayes were under attack during the recent legislative session. Hearings were held in connection with the affairs of the fish commission, and a large number of witnesses were examined. The committee appointed to conduct the investigation filed a report in which it was alleged that the interests of the state would be best served through the retirement of Mr. Eakin and Mr. Hayes from the fish commission.

The original report was filed with the legislature while a copy was sent to the executive department for consideration of Governor Patterson.

Neither Governor Patterson nor Hal Hoss, private secretary to the executive, would admit that letters had been sent to members of the state fish commission and state game commission asking for their resignations.

Mr. Hoss said the governor considered letters of this character in the light of private correspondence, and that their contents would not be divulged through the executive department.

"If persons receiving letters asking for their resignation desire to make the information public, that is their business," commented Mr. Hoss. The governor said he had no comment to offer.

It was said that Governor Patterson has received a large number of letters and telegrams recently urging him to retain Mr. Clifford and Mr. Finley as members of the state game commission. Mr. Clifford passed considerable time in Salem during the legislature, and was said to have held several conferences with Governor Patterson. A large number of Mr. Clifford's endorsements were received from eastern Oregon.

In event it is true that Governor Patterson has requested the resignations of members of the state game commission it is probable that he will announce the new personnel of both the fish and game commissions before Saturday of this week. He was said to have decided upon the men that will be selected for the fish commission.

In event of a reorganization of the state game commission friends of the governor predicted that Mr. Fleischer would be reappointed, while Mr. Clifford would be selected as master game warden to succeed E. F. Averill. Other likely appointees were said to be Ben Dorris of Eugene, L. E. Wright of La Grande, Mike Lynch of Redmond and Mat H. Carrigan of McMinnville. Mr. Dorris served on the game commission under appointment of ex-Governor Pierce but resigned before his term expired.

These same persons indicated that Frank Kendall of Portland was being considered for a member of the fish commission from the second district, while Chris Schmidt or Chris Leinenweber, both of Astoria, were the most promising prospects for the second district.

Carl D. Shoemaker, former master fish warden, may be reappointed to this office, reports indicated. Governor Patterson this week will also appoint a member of the state highway commission to succeed Wade Malone of Corvallis. His term expires Friday.

Among the men most prominently mentioned in connection with this appointment are C. E. (Pop) Gates of Medford, Warren Reed of Reedsport, W. T. Jewett of Eugene and Frank Miller of Albany.

Mr. Gates previously served as a member of the state fair board.

office, a fellow who had been remarked for his cleanly habits. I asked this young man if he could go out, should I so desire, and procure me a bottle of illicit drink. He replied that he could take me to six places in the course of half an hour, where he could get all the liquor desired with little or no questioning.

"This indicates that there are innumerable peddlers of liquor in the city of Salem, whose commodity is available to the youth. There is no use to dodge the issue. There is drinking among the younger element. It is a problem that it faces every citizen, and is not one that can be waved aside as trivial."

"It seems to me," said Professor Nelson, "that the moral fibre is less responsive than it used to be. Things have changed. In the old days, a person who did wrong could be placed on the other side of a fence, definitely beyond the pale. So confused are the issues of right and wrong that today we cannot do this. Now whether we, as a nation, are starting on a decline as the Romans did, or we are really progressing is for some one else to determine."

The bootlegger, Professor Nelson characterized as the most contemptible of criminals, for he well knows that his insidious product may make drunken wrecks out of the young men he caters to. "If the fellows would only connect this drinking, which they consider sport, with the instinct of self-preservation, and realize that it is seriously harmful physiologically, they might take a different front. As long as these indiscretions are viewed lightly by the general public, conveying to the youth, the sentiment that liquor is not deleterious, and that drinking is the sporting thing to do, just so long will drinking continue."

"The youth of this day is not hard, cruel, cynical, and unresponsive to influence any more than was the youth of yesterday. They are no more worldly wise. But they are not receiving the right influence. I suppose it is the luxury that we have our easy life, which contributes to this careless attitude."

corded by the various states permitted it. It was 1916 before Sapiro began to realize upon his extensive legal education, he testified. It was then that he began to establish himself as an expert in the legal end of the organization of farmers cooperatives. He listed an income of "approximately $10,000." Books for that year and the next are missing without hope of being found, Sapiro testified. He listed an income of "approximately $16,000 in 1917."

For the next nine years he listed these annual incomes: $15,839.55; $17,278.14; $30,237.28; $46,301.20; $61,531.31; $58,369.51; $58,068.45; $42,357.52 and $42,939.55.

The defense demanded the records for the nine years' figures, and Sapiro telephoned to San Francisco to have some of them sent here. Others are in Chicago where he lives, and will be brought.

Once in being cross examined by Senator James A. Reed, of Missouri, chief of Ford counsel, Sapiro flared out angrily.

"Did you make away with the books and accounts?" Senator Reed drew an interrogation concerning Sapiro's legal receipts in 1914-1916 when Sapiro practiced alone.

"I never made away with books or records of any kind in my life," Sapiro stormed out, half rising angrily from the witness stand.

"I didn't ask you about your life, I asked you about the books and records," returned the senator.

"No," emphatically replied Sapiro.

The witness testified that he had "no idea in the world," where they were.

"There was no time in the old days for dissipation. Then the eagerness of youth for new sensations, its fondness for excitement and love of the strange and novel had not been capitalized as they are today; it was still hardly regarded as legitimate business to trade upon the helplessness and inexperience of youth to convert them into a source of profit for the 'go-getter.'"

"All this has changed now. The bootlegger is just as accessible to the high school boy as to his father. Bootlegging is not a business the ethics of which are restricted by moral scruples. The money of the boy who promises to be a good customer is just as welcome as that of his elders. The natural instinct of the boy impels him to imitate his adult acquaintances; he listens to their conversation, finds that they have access to secret sources of supply, and are inclined to be rather boastful of their success in evading the authorities. Immediately he burns to imitate these adult exploits. He tries it, finds no difficulty in getting the stuff, consoles himself for its bad taste and effects by the thought that he is proving himself a 'real sport'—and the drink habit numbers another victim."

"It is difficult to say how large a percentage of the boys in the high school drinks. Perhaps it is not large. But the significant thing is that there is little or no community feeling against what drinking does go on."

"Many methods of solution have been suggested, such as more summary and stringent punishment of bootleggers, and less discrimination in sentences imposed, but before the problem can be met with properly there must be a determined effort on the part of the community to build up a sentiment against liquor law violations," declared the professor.

an opportunity to decide whether they desired this kind of legislation on the statute books.

"The fact that the state tax commission has withdrawn its demand for income schedules does not alter the situation. If the tax commission has the right to demand this class of information from every taxpayer, there is danger of abuses of power. Even if the blank should be further relaxed by cancelling the liability section, such action would not bind future tax commissions or assessors not now in office."

Strenuous opposition was directed at the law because of the resultant confidential questionnaire which was adopted by the state tax commissioner and county assessors at a meeting held in Salem some time ago. Business concerns protested that the questionnaire was unfair for the reason that it sought information of a confidential character which was not necessary for tax levying purposes.

Upon receipt of a large number of complaints the state tax commission held a meeting a week ago and eliminated from the questionnaire what was known as division C. Under this heading business concerns were required to give their sales during the year 1926, inventory at beginning of year, merchandise purchased, cost of manufacturing, gross profit, receipts from rentals and investments, salaries of officers or owner, operating expense, interest and net paid, depreciation and net profits from all sources. This action did not appease the taxpayers and more recently demands were received that that part of the questionnaire dealing with liabilities be eliminated. Most serious objection was made to giving notes payable, accounts payable, other liabilities, capital investment, surplus and undivided profits and total liabilities.

It was alleged by taxpayers that this information was not essential for tax levying purposes.

T. B. Kay, state treasurer and member of the tax commission, declared that the law was enacted for a meritorious purpose and that the opposition was the result of abuses in connection with the questionnaire.

"The questionnaire is not reasonable," said the state treasurer. "It goes too far into details, and seeks much information not needed for tax levying purposes. The questionnaire was adopted by the state tax commissioner, and assessors, and was not referred to the state tax commission until it was printed and sent out. It never was ratified by the state tax commission."

"At the time the bill was drafted the questionnaire was not thought of. Two important features were considered by the state tax commission. One was to remedy the old law so that county assessors might obtain an inventory and examine the books of a taxpayer. The other was to provide authority to examine and correct an assessment by a county assessor. The law provided these remedies."

Mr. Kay contended that the questionnaire and not the law was responsible for the opposition on the part of the taxpayers.
