

KIMBALL SPREADS BOOSTER SPIRIT FAR

The Local Canvass for a Larger School of Theology
Starts Next Monday

President John M. Canse of Kimball School of Theology says that any man who takes from his city more than he returns is an uncharitable asset. He may be a minister or a merchant, a tradesman or a professional man. He says that it is the settled purpose of the management of the school to cooperate with all constructive business and movements looking toward the betterment of the community. Kimball school will continue to spend more money in Salem than will likely be raised locally toward the support of the school. For this reason it would seem to be a fine investment for every type of business represented in Salem to give liberally toward the present campaign that is calculated to extend the usefulness and increase the size of Kimball school.

Salem Best Location
After careful investigation, Dr. Canse makes the assertion that Salem would seem to be the very best location for the school. The history of the Willamette valley and Salem in particular is unique and must have an increasing appeal as the years go by. But for solid business reasons there is a strong argument for not disturbing the site. A radius of 100 miles around Salem touches more towns interested in such a school than would be found from any other center in all the Pacific northwest. As the center of the broadest and longest fertile valley, it supports more communities than can be found elsewhere in this western territory, and for general prosperity, none can be found to surpass Salem.

Will Be Boosters
For best advertising there is a talking point in the support of Kimball school. This is the only church leadership school specifically interested in equipping men and women for the churches of the northwest. Every student is a potential leader wherever he goes. If we are good to them here they will become the best kind of boosters. This is different than with the regular college, as the seminary is essentially a leadership training center. Every time a minister moves he will take a good word for Salem to the new community. This affords an exceptional kind of advertising for Salem. And no city lends itself more naturally and fully to such a school than does this capital city.

Canvass Starts Monday
With the location settled in Salem it seems certain that a much larger support will immediately appear. The local canvass starts next Monday, and those who have been supporting friends in the past will readily welcome any reasonable assurance that the management will play fair and seek to contribute its best in return.

BAKER CITY EDITOR WAS ONCE SALEMITE

He Finds a New Salem That Does Not Look Much Like the Town of Old Days

I. B. Bowen, Sr., editor and publisher of the Baker City Morning Democrat, the third oldest newspaper in Oregon, next to The Statesman and Oregonian, is visiting Salem, a guest of Gus Anderson, the advertising man and sales manager, and his wife, Mrs. Anderson is a sister of Mrs. Bowen.

The Bowen family came to Oregon in 1862, and settled at Auburn, the mining town of the old days, then the county seat of Baker county. In 1866, the Bowen family came to Salem, and the elder Bowen and Edward P. Cranston bought out the Breyman Bros. store, "The Old White Corner," which was then where the United States National bank now stands. The firm was Bowen & Cranston. Mr. Cranston was one of the early graduates of Willamette university. He married Anna E. Bowen, the first white woman married in Idaho. Mr. Cranston and Quincy A. Brooks had owned a store at Walla Walla, and they moved to Auburn later, when that place was a booming mining town. Then the elder Bowen bought out Brooks.

Al. B. Crossman, afterwards postmaster of Portland, was one of the clerks of the store of Bowen & Cranston in Salem.

"I suffered from kidney trouble. Misery to stoop, agony to rise up, just sick all over. Foley Pills, a diuretic stimulant for the kidneys, made a big difference in me. I feel like another person, stronger and better in every way."

(Signed) Sara E. Weston, Belvidere, Ill.

The Bowen family went back to Baker county in 1872, Baker City having become the county seat, and Mr. Bowen senior bought out the store of A. H. Brown there; the first store started in the town. Mr. Brown afterwards became state treasurer.

The Baker City Morning Democrat had been established in 1870. In 1887, I. B. Bowen and Geo. R. Small bought the paper. They were partners for 33 years, when Mr. Bowen bought out his partner who retired and went to Portland. They were partners for 33 years without serious difference.

Mr. Bowen naturally finds things much changed in Salem since the late sixties. He is enjoying his visit here, and is much pleased with the growth and progress being made in Salem.

Mrs. Leon Brown. He was presented with a gift in appreciation of his many community services. Refreshments were served at a late hour.

Eight students will graduate from the eighth grade at Fruitland this year. Their annual picnic graduating include Mira Gerik, Ben Dodzewoda, Ralph Coulson, Marjory Quinn, LeRoy Riley, Bud

Forgard, Polly Smith and Leon Girod.
