WINGS AT DAWN

Dawn is dense with twitter,
And the white air swims and sings
In rapid wings that glitter,
And the flashing of wings,—
Delicate and fugitive shiverings.

The dews curl up in haze,
While the sun from his hive
Like a giant bee ablaze
Bursts dizzily alive—
And through the glow a thousand swallows dive.

Light like a storm
Deluges the grass,
And birds in a swarm
Wheel, dwindle and mass—
And their wings are split silver as they pass.

—JOSEPH AUSLANDER.

Cornelia Marvin, State Librarian, Supplies Business Women's Editorial

In a recent issue of the official publication of the Salem Business and Professional Women's club, which is edited by Blanche Isherwood, Miss Cornelia Marvin, state librarian, submitted the following editorial:

"I have been asked to supply the editorial word this month and

I am happy to comply with this request, because it has seemed impossible for me to attend meetings, and I do wish to express my interest in the work of the organization and in its future. When Dr. Rowland came to me years ago to tell about the struggling organization with a dozen or more members, and to talk over plans, it appealed to me very strongly. I believed that business women had interests of their own which could be promoted through cooperation, and I felt very sure that they had certain qualities developed through their experience which would make it possible for them to give, through an organization, something the community needed.

"The past few years of our club have been devoted to perfecting organization and acquaintance, to securing members, and to the fundamentals essential before any vigorous growth in influence is possible. The leadership has been fine, and certainly the time has now come for carrying out some of the projects which were part of the vision and hope of the founders.

"Most business women have so many financial responsibilities that the leaders have hesitated to burden them with the thought of assuming a debt collectively; but the club house must come, possibly two, one in town and one in the country; there must be an educational program and a recreational program all year round, and there must be a program which will be helpful to all working women, to the beginner and to those who bear the heaviest burden. The educational need is surely for constant self-improvement, which will be reflected in the business and profession."
