ENCOURAGE SUGAR BEET INDUSTRY

Raising sugar beets is one branch of agriculture that has been placed on a practical business basis. While it is true that all farmers do not make money with this crop, it is also true that where land is suitable and where the farmer knows his business, sugar beets are

The sugar factories contract in advance for the output of thousands of acres of beets. The farmer gets his money at stated times, and generally he gets a bonus for exceptionally good beets or if the price of sugar goes beyond a certain point.

Beet sugar districts are among the most prosperous in the country, and sugar beet growing is one of the most profitable major crops in the United States. No other one crop can do as much good to the land or offer as valuable a by-product for the stockraiser as can the, groceries, sugar beet. For this reason, it is important that the beet sugar industry be encouraged and built up in this section.—Industrial News Bureau of E. Hofer & Sons, Salem, Oregon,
