

SIDE LIGHTS OF THE STAGE and SCREEN

Elsinore Theater

That the squeaking of a chair and the rasping honing of a knife can be made important motivations in a motion picture is dramatically shown in "White Gold," starring Jetta Goudal which shows at the Elsinore today, in which Kenneth Thomson and George Bancroft are featured.

Thoughts, moods and environments as they affect four strained personalities on a bleak, drought-stricken Arizona ranch are the strange elements that Director William K. Howard has woven into an unusual study of life.

In "White Gold" the innermost processes of the mind are photographed. For example, Jetta Goudal, the star, follows a path of mental retrogression throughout the story and the disturbing elements that contribute to her depression are shown by a series of new camera accomplishments.

The rasping of a knife being whetted; the squeaking of a rocking chair working on a mind already dispirited by heat and hate, are among the chief factors in the unfolding of the drama.

Basically the film is a final study of life in the heat-tortured wastes. It makes no attempt at display, but it is simple in construction throughout while the story is advanced by a new technique. It is a picture that will long linger in the memory. The star and featured players presented highly artistic portrayals.

Capitol Theater

Cinema photography of western vistas has seldom recorded the sublime beauty which serves as a background to the Metro-Goldwyn-Mayer production, "The Valley of Hell," starring Francis McDonald at the Capitol theater today.

The Big Horn ranch, famous for its natural beauty, in western Nevada, was chosen as the permanent location camp of the Francis McDonald company, by Isadore Bernstein, who is supervising a series of eight romantic western dramas presenting this welcome addition to the ranks of western pictures.

Edna Murphy supports Francis McDonald, a charming blonde vision of loveliness. William Steele, a villain from whom there are few more villainous, ably takes care of the "dirty work." Antia Garvin is the dance hall girl with a bad disposition, while Joe Bennett portrays the difficult role of a disolute and drunken young brother of the heroine.

A most interesting announcement is made by Bligh's Capitol theater to the effect that the famous Australian National band will appear in this city on Tuesday, June 14, for two concerts only.

To all who love music rendered in the finest manner, whether it be classical or otherwise, this should be a most pleasing announcement. This great aggregation of musicians who have deservedly earned the name given it by many of the greatest musical critics in the world, of being "the finest band in America" only a few months after leaving this country on the last lap of their world tour, through the numerous demands and requests that they once more would give lovers of all that is good in music another chance to hear them.

It is doubtful if any band ever created such a furor or left such wonderful impressions as did the Australians on their recent tour of the world. From Melbourne to Capetown, to Paris, to Berlin, to London, to Edinburgh, to Montreal, to Toronto, and Vancouver and many other large centers the vast avalanche of unstinted praise would fill volumes. Their praises have been sounded by press and patrons alike in such a manner that one can only deduce on aggregate fact which is, that they are undoubtedly the ultimate perfection in band music.

The great versatility of the Australian National band is evidenced by their programs and the fact that lovers of high class music are everywhere forced to concede their marvelous ability in playing "jazz" numbers with the easy manner and manipulation of the greatest American "jazz" bands, and the equally wonderful rendition of the greatest and most difficult overtures, grand overtures and suites, as well as the semi-classical numbers. Their appearance here will be nothing short of a revelation in music.

Oregon Theater

From the frenzied shouts of "Ride 'im cowboy!" to the soft romantic strumming on guitars of "Le Paloma," from a scene crammed full of action at a western rodeo to the winning of a maiden under moonlit Mexican skies—these are some of the contrasts "Somewhere in Sonora," which shows at the Oregon theater today.

They are but few of the contrasts. The new First National feature starring Ken Maynard offers many. It offers opportunities for contrast with the average "western" which explains why "Somewhere in Sonora" is in a class all by itself. For it is superior. The usual methods of injecting thrills are avoided. Maynard's sensational ability to do almost the impossible in riding stunts takes care of this end. His director, Al Rogell, has seen to it that none of the exhibitions of his skill is forced into the picture. There is a logical reason for the use of every one of them.

"Somewhere in Sonora" is a tale of Arizona and Mexico, dealing with the troubles the natives had, not merely with the Mexicans, but with a group of American neer-do-wells who had organized into a troop of bandits. Naturally, with all the action the picture contains, it has not neglected the love theme. Kathleen Collins, who has appeared in former Ken Maynard pictures, is again seen as the lady for whom Ken Maynard fights—and wins.

Cooking by the troops best talent was enjoyed, both evening and morning, and at seven o'clock, they started on the return trip. Thirteen boys were on the hike.

The Camp-Fire Girls went on their weekly hike to the Lily pond near Uniondale Thursday. A very fine time was had by all.
