"All's well that ends well" is true enough as proverbs go, but when it comes to baseball, there is likelihood of heart failure taking its toll before the last man is land 1, Meyers 5, Levoff 2; struck out, if many games end like the out by Harkins 3, Levoff 2. Suthone Sunday at Oxford park. Sa-lem finally defeated Montavilla

Here were the Senators with a nice comfortable lead of 10 to 3, and then Montavilla broke loose with a slugging bee that did not end until after the Salem fans became aware that one innocent little home run would tie the

At that, if Montavilla had used a pinch hitter instead of letting Levoff, relief pitcher, strika out to end the game, the story might have been different; and on the bases. other hand, if any body had checked up and discovered that Moore, left fielder who took F. turn, it would have been over sooner

It was Moore, who had previously pinch hit for J. Harkins, who started that heart breaking rally with a single to center field. It was really Levoff's turn to bat, regardless of the fact that he had made the last out while batting out of turn the previous inning. Following Moore, Rogoway flied out to Goleman but Beamis came through with a home run to left. and that made it five for the Villains.

Engele singled to center and Misener singled to left. Engele stole third and scored on Manning's grounder, everybody being safe. Zimmerman Angled to right, scoring Misener, and Manning came home on Dillon's sacrifice fly to Steers. Then Levoff did a "Casey" and it was all over. runs were all Salem's ten earned, largely through the hitting of Goleman, who had the unusual honor of making no outs, getting a walk, four hits out of four times at bat charged, and three of those hits for extra Steers, who added one more to his list of home runs, and "Suds" Sutherland who in addition to holding the visitors to no gleaned a two bagger and a freak home run when the ball, after landing fair back of third base, coursed to the left and disappeared through a hole in the fence.

Montavilla scored first in the second when Manning singled. and scored when Edwards threw to second to catch him and there was nobody there to take the throw. The ball took a bad hop and eluded Goleman, and Manning and Burke flied out to Zimmerman. Then, on three pitches by J. Harkins, three perfectly good baseballs soared over the fence. and three runs were scored. Goleman met the first one for a two bagger: Steers hit the next in almost the same place, but it was a foul by inches, so Bill trotted back and put the next one out of the park on the home run side of the white post.

In the fourth, Sullivan figured in the scoring of another run when he hit a two bagger over the fence, went to third on a wild pitch and nicked the platter on Goleman's single.

Then there were three more in the sixth, which was opened with Sutherland's two bagger. "Suds" heard some fan say he'd never get on unless he walked, so he proceeded to prove it was wrong. Sullivan walked again, and Burke sacrificed them around. Goleman hit a two bagger, seoring Sutherland and Sullivan. Steers popped out to Zimmerman, and then Jacobberger, who had been coming up in the anti-climax after the previous rallies, swatted for two bases and Goleman crossed the plate.

It was Goleman's hit, a three bagger this time, that gave the Senators their last two runs in the Burke had walked, and he scored ahead of the fleet center fielder, who crossed the plate when P. Harkins, who was injured in trying to catch Goleman's long hit against the left field boards, threw wild to the plate.
