

SIDE LIGHTS OF THE STAGE and SCREEN

Elsinore Theater
If husbands have the right, or rather take the opportunity to flirt over week ends with pretty flappers, then the wives should have the same privilege. At least that is the lesson taught to three deceiving husbands in "Cradle Snatchers," a delightful farce which shows at the Elsinore today.

For sheer fun this picture has had no equal on the screen in years. The idea of three wives hiring three college boys to play the parts of Romeos to give their husbands a taste of their own medicine, worked out as it is in this Fox Films farce, appeals to the sense of humor and the justice of things. Of course one of the wives, played by Louise Fazenda, forgets that it is strictly business with her hired lover, and he, too, gets interested and forgets that he is only to play a part. Then there is the blond viking, who is chosen by another wife, played by Ethel Wales. He is very timid in the beginning, but later—well, he becomes interested. And then Dorothy Phillips, the wife who concocted the scheme of getting even with the husbands and finds she has lost control of the situation until the husbands return. But see this picture for yourself and enjoy an hour and a half of laughter.

Charles Frohman will present "The Honor of the Family" in the Elsinore theater Wednesday evening, June 22.

Otis Skinner is the star and the character he plays—that of the devil-may-care Colonel Philippe Bridau—is one of his most successful and individual portrayals. The tempestuous and indomitable Colonel was born in a story by Balzac, which that master called "Un Menage de Garcon." Then Paul Potter put this story into English for the use of Otis Skinner and called it "The Honor of the Family."

Thus the play has been an impressive lineage and this lineage has been carefully preserved in its adaptation for the English speaking stage.

In Otis Skinner's characterization of the Colonel there is the true Balzacian flavor. In flaring frock coat, boots that are down at the heel, fingers protruding from the broken tips of his gloves, a battered beaver hat at a jaunty angle on his insolent head, a business-like-looking cane under his arm, a soiled rosette of an officer of "The Legion of Honor" in his button hole, Bridau steps from the story of Balzac and is given convincing reality by the art of Otis Skinner.

All the primitive emotions are actively at play in "The Honor of the Family." Love and greed and envy are the very human stuff of which it is fashioned; all woven into a story in which romance and comedy gaily sport hand in hand. "The Honor of the Family" is the theater at its best. It is based on actualities but is expressed in terms that make the theater a place of delight and a retreat from the corroding harshness of work-day life.

The play has to do with the case of an aged miser who has become entangled in the schemes of those about him who covet his money. Success seems certain for them, when the old man's nephew, Colonel Philippe Bridau, hero of Austerlitz, a principal in many duels, card-sharp, and amiable ruffian appears on the scene. The Colonel immediately scents a great wealth. His rivals are keen witted still, and he triumphs in his mastery way.

In support of Mr. Skinner, an excellent company has been selected. The players include Jessie Royce Landis, Eugenie Woodward, Julia Shaw, Robert Harrison, Courtney White, Harry Burkhardt, D. V. Deering, Edward Butler, William Clark, Albert Berg, William Granger and Wilson Reynolds.

Oregon Theater

"God Gave Me Twenty Cents," shows at the Oregon today, Wednesday and Thursday. Herbert Brenon's latest Paramount production was adapted by John Russell from Dixie Willson's story, and in it, Brenon has caught all the color, comedy, beauty and suspense contained in the original story.

As the heroine, charming Lois Moran is better than ever, serving as a splendid contrast to the dark beauty loaned by Lya de Putti (the sensation of "Variety.") Jack Mulhall is good in whatever he does, and this, his latest part, is no exception to the rule. Appearing as a "heavy" for the first time, William Collier Jr. does well in the fourth major role.

"God Gave Me Twenty Cents," opens during the New Orleans Mardi Gras. Mulhall, a rough sailor, meets Lois and they are married. Some days later, when his boat is about to leave, Miss de Putti, an old flame, enters into the plot and the happiness of the newlyweds. How she uses an old gambling trick in her effort to win back this man of hers, and what eventually happens as she almost succeeds, make Mr. Brenon's current film one that can easily be placed on the same high plane as his justly famous "Bean Geste."

Saturday and Sunday at Champoeg Park.

Senator Chas. L. McNary spoke at the auditorium Saturday night to a large audience.

On Sunday at 11 A. M., Rev. C. E. Wharton of the Pomona Grange of Washington county, delivered an address on "The Makers of History," at the close of which Oliver C. Yocum, the old time Mt. Hood guide, accompanied by his wife, with Rev. Geo. Grier of Dundee, came forward and following the couple were two ladies, who signed the wedding certificate, as witnesses to the marriage of Mr. and Mrs. Yocum, June 18, 1864. They proceeded to the platform of the auditorium where Rev. Grier again united them in marriage.

Coming on the boat from Portland were three hundred members of the Trails club, paying tribute to the old time guide.

Freak Radio Fire

Radio's most freakish performance has been found in Washington, D. C. A crystal set connected to the antenna during the absence of the owners on a clear day, caught fire and burned a hole in a mahogany table. The set was owned by Charles S. Lusk, 85, and his 83-year-old wife, both radio enthusiasts.

DAKOTA POLITICIAN PRESIDENT'S GUEST

Worker for Coolidge in 1924 Campaign Dines at Summer White House

RAPID CITY, S. D. June 20.—(AP)—President Coolidge worked at his desk in Rapid City for several hours today and then invited a South Dakotan to the summer White House as his first dinner guest since coming to the Black Hills.

The guest was Opie Chambers, secretary of the Yankton, S. D., chamber of commerce, who, in 1924 took a prominent part in Mr. Coolidge's primary campaign in this state, which was lost to Hiram W. Johnson by little more than 1,000 votes.

Motoring to the state game lodge, Chambers recalled how he went to Washington after the campaign to report to his chief, telling him he was sorry the state was not won, and how the president had remarked:

"No need for apologies. I consider the outcome a victory."

But tonight as the first summer White House guest, Mr. Chambers made it plain that there was to be no politics discussed and that the visit was purely social.

"I am going to tell Mr. and Mrs. Coolidge, however," the Yankton man said before leaving Rapid City, "that since they have come here the people of South Dakota have developed a genuine admiration for them."

While Mrs. Coolidge braved a rain in an attempt to equal the angling record of her husband, the president motored 64 miles to and from the summer White House to transact some business and receive callers at Rapid City. The trip, however, was over gravel roads which suffered nothing from the downpour.

Among the callers was Governor Bulow of South Dakota, who came to pay his respects before taking up the duties of a special legislative session in Pierre, and a group which invited the president to the Indian agency, 100 miles from the lodge. Mr. Coolidge gave encouragement for his attendance. Should he go there he would see an old time western Indian fight, with a fort besieged by "savages" in warpaint and regalia.

The president also took under advisement an invitation to attend a farmers' picnic in Ardmore, S. D., at which 10,000 are expected.

This apparatus used to guide planes by radio is a forerunner of 40 other similar beacons to be established at 200-mile intervals along the 8234 miles of civil airways. Dr. George K. Burgess, director of the U. S. Bureau of Standards, has his hand on the control.

TACOMA, Wash., June 20.—(AP)—Confession to her part in the robbery of a chief belt line street car here this afternoon was made tonight by Mrs. Howard Sheehan, pretty, bobbed-haired and 23 years old. The girl, her husband and Cecil Kenne, all of Seattle, were captured by Tacoma police an hour after the women held up the street car and escaped in a car driven by a girl.

MOUNT HOOD SCALED BY YMCA CLIMBERS

Ranger Cabin on Summit Covered With Snow; Far Points Recognized

With perfect weather favoring them, 21 members of the local YMCA made the climb to the top of Mt. Hood over last week-end and returned to Salem Sunday evening.

Saturday afternoon the party made the trip to Government Camp in five private cars. There they rested until 11:30 p. m., when the guide, William Reid Jr., Mazama mountaineer, started them on the long climb upward. At the timber line they met another party of Boy Scout leaders making the climb. The log of the journey sounds about like this: Timber line, 1:35, rested half an hour; Crater Rock, 8 a. m., put on paint for final climb, one hour rest; summit, 9:50 a. m., took pictures, signed the Mazama register, looked over the world; reached Government Camp again 2:30, mostly by sliding.

The climbers found the ranger cabin on the summit almost entirely covered with snow. There was very little fog, and visibility was so good that many far distant points could be easily recognized. The party brought back with them an ice-axe, as a souvenir of the trip, with the names of those making the climb to the top written on a leather shield.

Those gaining the top were William J. Reid, Jr., guide, Albin C. Henningsen, Jack Spang, Emmett Callahan, Byron Wright, Chester E. Page, and son; Hugh Ward, Connell Ward, Earle Johnson, Bob Boardman, Robert Kitch, Ben Rickel, Dr. F. L. Utter, Glen E. Jenkins, and W. J. Linn.

However, being the emblem of our country,
2. When carried in a procession with another flag or flags, the flag of the U. S. should be either on the marching right, i. e., the flag's own right, or when there is a line of other flags, the flag of the U. S. may be in front of the center of that line.

BAKER HERALDED HERE OLDEST OF PIONEERS

challenge, to the title of oldest person present at the picnic. He will be 93 years old this fall. Born in Adams county, Illinois, Groschong crossed the Rockies with the wagon train of '53 and settled in the Oregon country. And running him a close second, with the title, at least, of the oldest woman present, was Mrs. M. C. Byrd, 92 years old, oldest member of one of Salem's most prominent families.

Others, too, who have founded families with names high among Oregon's heroes, and honored among leaders of business and state, were there—too many to name the complete list, yet here are a few who represent the caliber of the many:

Abbie Hatch Farrar, born at Oregon City, and a resident of Salem since 1863, mother of John Farrar, Salem postmaster; E. L. Briggs, Civil war veteran now in the Soldier's Home in Roseburg, resident of Salem since 1881; A. E. Thomas of Scotts Mills, 80, native son of Marion county, Civil war veteran; K. T. Maulding of Silverton, 89, veteran of the Civil war, resident of Oregon for 46 years; John W. Payne of Portland, 88, a pioneer in the Yamhill country 55 years ago; W. B. McCallister, 76, of Howell Prairie; Henry Porter, 76, of Aumsville; and Judge Peter H. D'Arcy, 73, of Salem.

And young and old, there could be found in the happy throng of picnickers such names as Boise, Patton, Humphries, Savage, Drager, Paulus, Porter, Moores, Groschong, Willis, Looney, Farrar, Swafford, Baker, Parrish, Byrd, Sheffe, Chamberlin, Nesmith, Ogle, Scott, Kelly, McCallister, Rice, D'Arcy, Hort, Hewitt, Thompson, Welch, Herrin, Hall, Carter, Murphy, Weitzel, and many another name famous among Oregonians wherever they may meet.

To say that such a picnic was a success is to say the obvious. For it's always fair weather when "old timers" get together.
