SCIENCE FLIGHT FOUND SUCCESS; GET NEW DATA

charted winds to wrest the secrets of the elements out of the regions where storms are brewed.

The purpose of the flight, over an air trail already blazed by two planes, primarily interested in speed and distance, was the study of atmospheric conditions over the ocean at different altitudes.

It was planned to attempt to formulate some broad general rules by which aviators may be able to subjugate the winds to a condition of servitude, and to make allies out of storms which at present are the airman's principal enemies.

Less than 8 hours after the take-off, Commander Byrd himself indicated that the purpose of the flight was already being achieved.

Data Obtained
A message from the America picked up at Halifax, concluded: "We think we are getting some scientific data."

He did not say what this data was, or of what practical use he believed it could be put to, but from the hopeful tone of the message, it was guessed that Byrd, a modest and conservative man, had made important discoveries which might be expected to have direct effect on flying in the future.

The America flew during the day through weather which was fitting subject for scientific experimentation. There were large patches of fog to be passed through, in places the wind was unfavorable, and in other ways opportunity was offered to study conditions at present inimical to flying.

The science of communication reached new heights during the day as Byrd kept in almost constant communication with ship and shore by radio. Not only did

JURY INDICTS HUERTA
Ex-Mexico Provisional President Charged With Conspiracy

LOS ANGELES, June 29.— (AP)—Adolfo de La Huerta, former provisional president of Mexico, and nine of his aides and staff officers were indicted by the federal grand jury today, on a charge of conspiring to violate United States neutrality laws by attempting to smuggle arms and munitions across the border.

The other members of the party, Bert Acosta, pilot, and Berni Balchen, relief man, did not sign any of the messages, nor were they mentioned in any of them, except under the general heading of "we," but this was taken to indicate that all was well with them.

Even the fact that slight trouble was being experienced on board the monoplane became instantly known by means of radio from the plane. At 8:41 Byrd reported that compass trouble was being occasioned by the extra gas tanks. Again when gas was to be pumped the radio was stilled to avoid possibility of a spark igniting the fuel, but before the pumping was begun Byrd informed radio stations what was in progress, so that there might be no alarm occasioned by the ensuing silence.

The America is the first trans-Atlantic plane from which it has been possible to conduct communication tests as both Charles Lindbergh and Clarence Chamberlain forebore carrying radio sets.
