HUG DEFEATED BY PORTLANDER

Wallace Hug, Salem's boy golfer, who a few weeks ago made the low score in an inter-city tournament here competing against adult players, was defeated in the quarter-finals of the junior tournament in Portland, but his opponent in that match was Wilson Johnston, who is favored to take first place. Johnston won from Hug 5 to 4.

plane, like the traditional love of the sailor for his ship, was proved today when Maitland and Hegenberger visited the great monoplane which bore them at nearly 100 miles an hour in the history making flight of 25 hours and 50 minutes.

Hawaiians marveled at the endurance shown by the trim young army fliers. Hunger typical of healthy young manhood, was the only thing that troubled them on their long flight, and they were marked today for the good natured railing of friends for having failed to find chicken soup and chocolate placed aboard the plane at Oakland.

With only a couple of hours for rest yesterday, they were up in the afternoon for a plunge in the sea. They were routed out of bed early today for a long list of official and social affairs, where tribute was paid them for their exploit.

They called upon Major General Edward M. Loomis, commanding the Hawaiian department of the army, upon Rear Admiral John D. McDonald, and upon Governor Wallace H. Farrington. They were guests of honor at a community luncheon.

A dinner at the home of Colonel John H. Howard, department air officer and a public reception at 9 o'clock was the evening program arranged for the fliers.

Hegenberger explained at a community luncheon given in their honor at which the nervousness of the two airmen was plainly apparent, "we are bewildered. We don't know just how we do feel."

Four times during the luncheon the crowds at the tables rose and cheered them. The first acclamation came when the aviators entered the roof garden, decked with flower leis, where the banquet was held.

The two youngsters in the flying corps uniform, ate their luncheon under difficulties, with motion picture and news cameras clicking in front of their table. "Smile, please," directed the cameraman, whereupon Hegenberger dropped his spoon and Maitland blushed.

Maitland told the story of his flight over again, but this time he told it in four sentences, punctuated with smiles.

"Yesterday was the happiest day of my life," he declared. "I had planned and hoped and worked for that day ever since I first joined the service. When I saw Kauai and then Oahu, I was the happiest boy in America. I'm very happy to be here and I'm pleased with the reception we've received. Thank you."

Hegenberger's talk was just as brief. He expressed their bewilderment at finding that they were "really here," and continued, "we're grateful that we were chosen for the mission. It is a dream come true. I can't find words to express my appreciation of the reception you here have given us."

"During the three years I was stationed in Hawaii, I learned to love the people here, and it seems good to be back again." Then he sat down.

"Bravo, kid," commented Maitland.

fraternal temple and a garage building.

Then there are the bridges authorized in the bond election of this week, and the sewer system enlargement made possible by the voters' decision at the same time; not to mention an incinerator. These things will not appear in the building permit totals, but they must be taken into account when construction activity is being measured.

The biggest project of all, the state office building, is still somewhat in doubt, but if the law calling for its erection is constitutional, work will be started within a short time.

Last day activity in securing permits at the recorder's office raised the total for June to 40 permits for estimated costs of $300,725, as compared to 27 in June, 1926, for a total cost of $151,850.

Dwelling permits in the month just ended totaled 22, as compared to 17 in June, 1926, and the costs were listed at figures totaling $70,550 as compared to $67,150.

The buildings announced Thursday included a store structure on State street just east of 12th at a cost of $9,000, which will be the property of H. E. Rideout; a filling station at 1198 South Commercial, for which the permit was issued to Arnold & Kard.
