COMMISSION HEARS KLAMATH VETERANS

More Liberal Terms of Loans in Irrigation Project Asked by Group

Ex-service men from Klamath county appeared before the state bonus commission Tuesday to urge a more liberal policy on the part of the state with relation to loans on lands in the Klamath irrigation district.

A. M. Thomas, secretary of the Klamath Irrigation district, said that the present policy of the commission to the effect that the appraised liabilities of the lands should include the district operation charge of $90 an acre precluded the ex-service men from taking advantage of the loan feature of the state bonus law.

He contended that the construction obligation should not be considered a lien against the lands for the reason that there was no interest charge and that the annual payments would wipe out the principal in 40 years.

Most of the ex-service men who are seeking loans on these lands are located in the Tula Lake section of the Klamath Irrigation district. The ex-service men informed the commission that they desired to use the loans for the purchase of livestock and permanent improvements.

The commission instructed its secretary to conduct an investigation of the situation with particular reference to whether the federal land banks would consider loans on these tracts a sound business transaction.

The attitude of the Japanese toward China is probably not now what it was immediately after the World war, when the famous twenty-one demands were made which threatened China's independence. Japan is far different from China in the spirit of its people. The Japanese are intensely nationalistic, always seeking to improve their learning and methods. China lacks a spirit of unity, which it needs to make its people good rather than for selfish or work together for the common provincial interests.

BRIGHTER DAWN STILL FAR DISTANT IN CHINA

fighting during the last year, but due to the strong forces maintained there by foreign nations, the foreign sections were not entered by the mobs and soldiers. When the southern troops captured the city, many local Chinese hailed them with joy, Mrs. Trindle said, only to find that they brought more suffering.

When the Trindles went to China 25 years ago, immediately after the Boxer rebellion, the only lighting in the homes was a saucer of grease with a string extending out of it. Now this has been replaced by the kerosene lamp, with the Standard Oil company supplying fuel for the millions of homes. But many of the old methods and practices still exist in the inland provinces.

Mr. and Mrs. Trindle have been teaching in the municipal council schools for foreigners, in Shanghai. Separate schools are conducted for boys and girls, according to the British plan of education. In the school where Mrs. Trindle taught, girls of 14 nationalities attended. Other schools were maintained for Chinese students, separate from the foreigners' schools, because of the de-size for the Chinese classics on the part of the Chinese.

In contrast to the American system of education, the Bible is taught in the schools there, as it is in all English schools. No attempt at denominationalism is made, and children of all races, including Jews and Buddhists, took the work of their own free will. High ideals and standards of morals can be taught through the use of scriptures, Mrs. Trindle declared, as a conclusion of her experience there for many years, better than in any other way.

Mr. Trindle went to China in 1901 as a missionary, but because of ill-health was forced to accept a position in the Shanghai municipal schools. He purchased a home there, expecting to spend the rest of his life in that country, but recent disturbances there have broken up the work and created such conditions that he believes it safer for his children to live in the United States.

CREMATION HALTED FOR INVESTIGATION

Fuller Probe Into Death of Violet Maude Payne Planned by Coroner

SEATTLE, July 26.—(AP)—Cremation of the body of Miss Violet Maude Payne, who, a coroner's jury found, drowned after a liquor party aboard the yacht of F. Creigh Nelson, wealthy Seattle broker, was halted tonight by Coroner W. H. Jones pending a fuller investigation of the tragedy.

Although the coroner's jury last night decided that the death of Miss Payne was accidental, Coroner Jones said there were several points in the case to be cleared up before the cremation, which had been set for this evening.

The jury, after hearing testimony for 12 hours, found that Nelson and two other men who were guests at the party, were "cowards, and morally but not criminally responsible" for the death of the music and dancing teacher. Evidence showed that the three men stood by and did little to save Miss Payne from drowning and that they conspired to conceal the fact of her death.

Coroner Jones' decision to halt the cremation was reached after a conference with Prosecutor Eugene D. Colvin and Mrs. Mabelle Fielder, sister of Miss Payne. Mrs. Fielder, who expressed keen disappointment in the jury's finding, voiced her belief that "even now all is not known about my sister's strange death."

Police detectives continued to work on the case today but found nothing new or sensational, they said.
