Editor Statesman:

Cowardice is a trait found in the lowest types of mind which has no consciousness of duty, responsibility, sympathy or any of the virtues which make for a decent civilization. There are physical, moral and spiritual cowards and the combination of all forms of cowardice is to be found in one who uses the most contemptible of all weapons—poison.

Even in barbaric times the poisoner has been looked upon with horror. Man has always detested reptiles and those of reptilian nature because like the cold blooded venomous, hissing reptile the poisoner in human form is dreaded as he strikes even without the warning of hiss or rattle. To that extent an unintelligent reptile would take a higher position than his two-legged brother.

Sometime ago a friend of mine presented to me a handsome Boston bull terrier. I gave the animal to my little daughter. The two were great companions and the pet's eyes looked up at her mistress in worship. All of us in the family loved it. One afternoon as I stepped on our porch the dog rushed towards me barking in agony. A veterinarian was immediately called and three or four hours of work by the good doctor could not save our Jimmy from the poison which was destroying his internal organs.

I do not know what contemptible moral imbecile is responsible. I pity such a dead soul whose moral fabric is rotten, but whoever the person is I feel certain that if there is such a thing as "being accursed of God," such a person is responsible for the murder of a helpless, faithful animal who trusted human beings, not knowing that among men are to be found creatures lower than the filthiest scum of a stagnant pool.

I hope that those who own or love animals will watch carefully so that sometime the moral pervert or perverts may be captured and then I for one will see to it that he or they land at the state penitentiary or the asylum where they will be given attention so that the rest of us might be free from the skulking cowards.

EDUCATOR RETURNS FROM PACIFIC MEET

President Hall Considers Relations Council Meeting Great Success

EUGENE, July 29.—(AP)—President Arnold Bennett Hall of the University of Oregon returned today from Honolulu where he had been attending the Pacific Relations council meeting.

"It was a most illuminating experience to see the wonderfully good feeling as Japanese, Chinese, Americans, British, Australians and other peoples of the Pacific regions gathered around one table determined to discuss their problems fully, and in my opinion it was a most successful meeting," President Hall said.

There were 140 delegates at the conference. Dr. Hall was there in the capacity of adviser for the research program the council is planning.

The immigration problem was brought up as one of the important problems but nothing was discussed in regard to the United States policies of exclusion, the California Japanese exclusion act, and the like, Mr. Hall reported.

Immigration has to be solved, the group decided and talked of three ways in which it could be done, by birth control, by raising standards of living, or by finding an outlet for the Oriental people, either in Canada, United States or elsewhere.

President Hall will be here for two days only, leaving then for Hanover, N. H., to attend the national social science research conference of which he is chairman.
