

COURSES OF STUDY STRESS PRACTICAL

Arithmetic Review Included Among Requisites for High School Seniors

Printed in a separate volume from the other subjects, the new course of study in English for Oregon high schools has been published and is being mailed out to city and county superintendents throughout the state.

Persons who assisted in preparing the course of study were Mrs. Margaret Goodall, head of the English department, of the university high school at Eugene; Miss Winifred Graham of Marshfield, Miss Ada V. Ross of Salem, Miss Laude M. Mochel of Woodburn and Dr. M. Elwood Smith of the Oregon Agricultural College.

The other high school courses, bound in one volume, will be ready for distribution within the next 10 days.

In most subjects the new high school course is little different from the one in use during the last four years. The work in one or two subjects has been thoroughly revised, and provision has been made for the recall of certain desirable skills acquired in the elementary grades but frequently lost through disuse during the high school period.

Every department is made responsible for orderliness and legibility in written productions. Formal classes in spelling and penmanship are advised for high school students who cannot otherwise be brought up to an acceptable standard.

Tests I have seen reported as well as those I have conducted show that high school seniors write and spell somewhat better than high school freshmen," said C. A. Howard, state superintendent of schools.

Their accomplishments in these regards, ought to be very much better. Through the operation of this course of study we hope to approach in all our high schools, the results now being secured in the best of them.

Another feature of the new course of study is the inclusion of a half-year of reviews in arithmetic and geography which is recommended as a required course for all seniors except those who have taken higher arithmetic and high school geography as a part of their regular work.

"Most young people just out of the high school flounder badly in handling ordinary business calculations," said Mr. Howard. "This is because they have not handled such calculations for a period of four years. It is the purpose of this course to whet up arithmetic skills that have grown dull through disuse. I am confident that, for most students, these skills can be brought to a keen edge in a comparatively brief period."

The review course provides for thorough and persistent drill both for speed and accuracy in the fundamental operations of addition, subtraction, multiplication and division. Common and decimal fractions, measurements, percentage and business applications are thoroughly reviewed.

The review in geography is designed to adjust the students to an accurate view of such matters as place relations, political divisions, trade routes and world commerce, before cutting them loose from high school.

"Popular demand has a great deal to do with calling attention to need of emphasis on certain phases of school work involved in these revisions," said Mr. Howard. "But this is one of the situations where popular demand and professional advice seem to be in accord, for the national education association's commission on reorganization of secondary education in its report nine years ago, set forth seven aims for secondary education, and one of those was mastery of the fundamental processes."

INDIANS BOUND BY LAW

Not Exempted from Provisions of Anti-Fishwheel Law

Indians of Yakima must comply with the provisions of the law enacted by the voters at the 1927 election prohibiting the use of fish wheels in the Columbia river and the operation of fish traps and seines in the streams east of the Cascade locks, according to a legal opinion handed down by the attorney general here Saturday.

The Indians contended that they were authorized to operate fish wheels in the Columbia river under a treaty with the federal government.

The opinion was prepared at the request of M. T. Hoy, master fish warden.

With a desire to aid the high school graduates who intend to attend college this fall and in accordance with Governor Patterson's plan for harmony between the University of Oregon and O. A. C., members of the Greater Oregon committee are explaining the courses offered by the institution.

Students in engineering and agriculture are advised to attend O. A. C.; while those wishing courses in the sciences, arts, and literature are advised to enter the university.

Besides explaining the courses offered in the different schools of the university, members of the committee give information in regard to expenses and fees, and aid is given the student in securing catalogues and other printed informational matter.

Courses are offered at the university through the college of literature, science and the arts, consisting of 22 separate departments; and the schools of law, architecture and allied arts, business administration, education, journalism, medicine, music, physical education and sociology.

TAPS FOR GOVERNOR WOOD SOUNDED TODAY

This area. By gathering units from Fort Meyer, Fort Washington and Fort Humphreys, the war department, however, was able to muster all the component units of a full regiment, even though the actual number of men is below that set forth as the escort of a major general and a former chief of the army general staff.

As the funeral party passes along Pennsylvania avenue and the road leading to the cemetery, situated on the Virginia Hills overlooking the city, a horse will be led in the rear of the flag draped casket with the lofts in the stirrups reversed.

Flags on all government buildings will be at half staff and all high government and army officials now in Washington are expected to attend the ceremonies at the grave.

The funeral procession probably will leave the station about one hour and a half after the body arrives. The military escort will be commanded by Major General Hanson Elv, commandant of the army war college.

The body also will be accompanied to the grave by the widow and the general's three children, Leonard, Jr., Osborne and Lusita, and the escort from Boston.

Colonel John T. Axton, chief of army chaplains, and Chaplain W. H. Watts, have been selected to conduct the services at the grave.

MESS CALL POPULAR

COURT SESSIONS HELD AT ELK LAKE CAMP DAILY

ELK LAKE YMCA CAMP, AUG. 8.—(Special).—When the directors of the camp want to get the boys together in a hurry, they have the bugler blow the "mulligan call." The cook served what he called "slungooney hominy" last night, but in spite of its name, the boys liked it.

The boys held court every day or so, to take care of cases of discipline. In the court the other day, Bill East, the judge, called "Order, order in the court!" Scotty Marr, who did not sleep well the night before, and who was on the jury that day, said sleepily, "I'll take coffee and an egg sandwich."

In the first aid class, Ed Cross distinguished himself by answering to the question of how to cure a hemorrhage of the lungs, "Put a tourniquet around the neck." Virgil Harrison, with a name which is a combination of poet and president, doesn't seem to be worrying about living up to either of the names, from the difficulty his tent mates have in getting him up in the morning.

GOOD STATESMAN AD IS COMMENDED

An Unselfish Effort Calling Attention to Salem and the Salem District

Editor Statesman: I don't very often break into print, but the present occasion warrants a few words of praise, and I always found more pleasure and profit in one word of praise than a whole page of criticism. I now have in mind the quarter page advertisement that appeared in The Statesman of July 28th, run and paid for by the U. S. Realty company. I don't know who wrote this ad, but it was the best thing in the way of a boost for Salem and the Willamette valley that has appeared in the press or anywhere else so far as I have seen and apparently without any selfish motive.

An Unselfish Effort A paper going out over the country as The Statesman does is sure to be read by a good many people outside of Oregon, and when any person or firm advertising in its pages goes out of the way to set forth the advantages of Salem and the surrounding country knowing when they pay for the space that it does others as much good as it does themselves, it seems to me they are entitled to a good deal of credit. If there are any bankers or other business men in Salem who have not read that advertisement I hope they will get a copy of The Statesman of July 28th and look it up. As a rule, I am not much interested in boasts or boosters and I don't spend much time reading the ads in the papers. But I am a taxpayer and home owner here, and when any firm in Salem, or individual either, spends good money to tell the outside of the resources of this country and the opportunities awaiting him here, I feel that I and every other property owner in this section has been benefited. We need more publicity of the same kind.

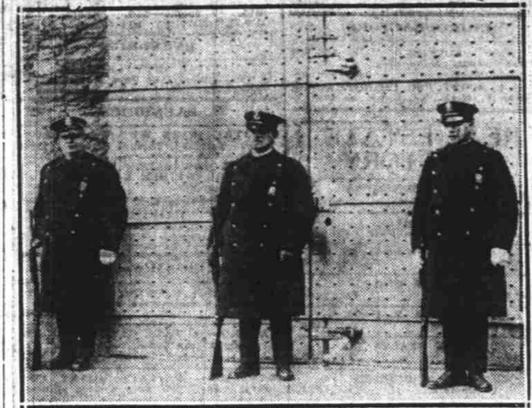

E. W. POWERS, Salem, Ore., Aug. 2, 1927.

What He Refers To The part of the advertisement referred to by Mr. Powers is no doubt the following:

If you are a stranger in Salem, looking for a farm; a home in the city or a vacant lot or an acre tract upon which to build a house, we have it for you. Maybe we can save you time and money by putting you in touch with the very thing you are looking for.

Valley has produced this year? Who ever saw a more perfect season anywhere than this has been?

"Oregon has been spoken of as the Green Land. No wonder! With her green mountains, green hills and green valleys, her cool streams cutting like ribbons of silver; her refreshing springs that splash along the highways for the delight of the thirsty traveler--all these go to make this the most perfect home-country this side of Paradise itself.

"If you want to live in Salem, buy now. If you want a farm near Salem, you will never get it for less money than right now.

"And listen! You haven't heard of any business failures in Salem, have you? You haven't heard of any broken or shaky banks in Salem, either, have you. Of course not--there aren't any. "Then this is the place to live. We know you could do a lot worse, but we don't think you could do better than locate here."
