Amparo in the early morning, before Mexican troops had opportunity to reach the mine. Direct Word Not Received Since the message yesterday to the state department reporting the mine seizure and the barricading of foreigners still at Amparo, no direct word of their condition has reached Washington. The identity of the besieged is likewise as yet unknown.

State department officials said today that they had no evidence of laxity on the part of the Mexican government in protecting American lives and property. The American embassy in Mexico City is better able to judge as to the official Mexican attitude, they said, and therefore all action would be left to it for the present.

Approval, however, of the embassy's attitude in making representations over the seizure of the mines and in asking for Mexican federal protection for the foreigners in Amparo was cabled to Mexico City. At the same time the embassy was instructed to keep the question of adequate protection for American lives and property at Amparo before the Mexican foreign office.
