ger than our common squirrel. It is covered with a soft, dense, pearl grey fur about one and a quarter inches long. The average male weighs about 18 ounces and the female about 19 ounces. The fur of the real chinchilla is considered to be the most beautiful as well as the most costly fur in the world. The skins measure about 7x12 inches and on the raw fur market sell at from $100 to $200 per skin, depending upon the color, texture, primeness, etc. When you realize that one of these skins in the raw brings from $1.50 to $2 per square inch and that a finished coat brings from $40,000 to $65,000, you can better understand the real value of this little animal as a fur-bearer.

In February, 1927, there was incorporated at Portland a company known as the Real South American Chinchilla Fur Farms, Inc. This company, which is the first company of its kind in the United States, if not in the entire world, was organized to breed and raise the real South American chinchilla in captivity.

The history of the real chinchilla is hard to trace, but considering its characteristics, habits, how it lives, how it breeds, etc., leads one to believe that it is a descendant of the guinea-pig family. Possibly its ancestors away back in the far distant past were in some way connected with the guinea pig.

Today the habitat of the real chinchilla is only on the higher elevations of the Andes mountains, but it is believed that in years back it lived and thrived in the lower altitudes. This belief is strengthened by the fact that when this animal is brought down by easy stages it thrives better and produces an offspring that is larger than the parents.

O'BRIEN LOSES FIGHT
SAN FRANCISCO, Sept. 23. (AP)—Frankie Klick, 125, of San Francisco, stopped Tommy O'Brien, 126, of Portland, in the seventh round of their scheduled 10 round bout at Golden Gate rink tonight. O'Brien took a hard beating to the face and body, and suffered a bad cut on the lip. The referee stopped the fight to save him from further punishment as he was outclassed from the start.

MOTHER KENNEDY
LIFE DEVOTED ONEDaughter Chief Interest;
Tells of Long Experience
In Evangelism

Mrs. Minnie Kennedy, better known as "Mother Kennedy," mother of the well-known Almee Semple-McPherson, has only one interest in life—has had and will continue to have—just one interest—the success and well-being of her daughter.

Mrs. Kennedy, a well groomed and refined lady of about fifty years, told something of her life story yesterday to a Statesman reporter as she rested in her suite at the Marion hotel. This woman, of whom so much has been written, and who has been in the limelight the past year, feels that fate has been, in a way, rather unkind to her. All her life she has devoted to one single purpose, that of helping her daughter.

"I was born in Canada and my daughter, Almee, was born there. I spent 35 years of my life in the Salvation Army always interested in the spiritual things of life. Almee inherited that desire, talent, or call it what you will. She finally got started for herself. When she found failure and sickness, with no friends in sight, I hastened to her side. I stayed by her through thick and thin. I am doing it now, and God helping, I shall always 'stick'."

Mrs. Kennedy refused to discuss the famous "kidnapping" case wherein her daughter figured. She promised to take that up, "so far as possible" in her Sunday night meeting at the Evangelistic Temple where she is holding a few meetings during her stay-over in Salem. At this meeting she will review her entire life as it has been taken up with spiritual work.

"I'm just an old-fashioned Methodist of the John Wesley school," said Mrs. Kennedy. "I have my Bible and I stick to fundamentals."

Whatever the world or newspapers say about Mrs. Kennedy, she impressed the writer as a good, honest woman, who started out to spread the gospel with no thought of financial rewards, and upon whom the ups and downs of life have left no ill effects except that of experience and which shows plainly in the lines that are beginning to draw gently over a motherly and gentle face.

Charley Stoneham, Giants' owner, buys soccer club. He would have been better off if he had bought a couple of socking ball players.

BOWLING ACADEMY
OPENING TONIGHTSalem Acquires One of the Best Equipments Amusement
Places on the Coast

The Salem Recreation company bowling academy owned and operated by Virgil M. Stolker and Merv C. Hemenway, will have its grand opening tonight at 8 o'clock.

Mayor T. A. Livesley will be on deck to roll the first ball, and teams representing a number of local business firms and organizations will be on hand to vie for the generous prizes offered to the skillful ones.

These teams will represent Hawkins & Roberts, Rodgers Paper company, the Elks, the First National Bank, and the Cherry City bakery; there will be two from the American Legion, and others.

This bowling academy is not only one of the finest equipped plants of its kind in the country, with every convenience supplied for its patrons, but is a real bowling academy where the game will be taken seriously, rather than a place of idle amusement.

The proprietors are men who are interested in bowling and its development; especially Mr. Stolker, who has been and still is, when he finds the time to compete, one of America's crack bowlers.

Several years ago, while representing the University of Washington, he turned in the first perfect 300 score at one of New York City's leading alleys. He also set a high average for a series, 259 1-3.

He also held the high individual score in 1923 in the American National bowling tournament, which was held in New York, with a tally of 251, and averaged 224 4-5, which was a new record for the run.

But his best record was made in the individual tournament, also in New York City the same year, when he made a perfect run of 300, twelve successive strikes. He made other good scores in that tournament, but lost the finals by one pin—and that one wobbled but didn't fall.
