DISPLAYS SEEN BY FAIR CROWD HELD BEST EVER (Continued from Page One)

F. Turner is in charge. Slogans Many "Largest hop center in the United States." "Largest prune, cherry and potato center in the state." reads the slogans in the Marion county booth, which occupies a prominent position in the hall. Wheat, barley, vetch, clover, flax and oats adorn the walls of the booth. In one section all sorts of vegetables are artistically arranged, while in the rear stands an archway with ears of corn hanging from it. Nearby stands an old fashioned corner crib with the sign on it, "May be seen on every farm in the Willamette Valley in a few years." The centerpiece in this section is made up of an excellent exhibit of onions and to-matos. The second section of this booth is devoted to the exhibition of packed fruits, canned fruits, nuts, flax, linen and copper. A large basket of Burbank potatoes is the center of attraction. They are nearly all perfect and were grown by Bruce Bowne of Turner. W. A. Taylor and A. J. Taylor are in charge of this booth.

Malheur Exhibit Good—Malheur county is ably represented at the fair this year with a fine exhibit. Wheat, oats, barley and rye adorn the walls of the booth, while vegetables and canned goods occupy the various shelves. Fruits of various kinds are to be found in this booth, while in the center there is a large squash surmounted by turnips, melons, onions, peppers, etc. Especial attention is called to the honey display in this booth as well as to the exhibits of sweet potatoes. V. V. Hickox is in charge of the booth and he says that everything was produced by means of irrigation except for the wool. In the county there are 500,000 acres of land with only about $7,500 under cultivation. The annual agricultural income totals $5,000,000. The exhibit of corn is excellent and the annual income from this product reaches $200,000. For the past year there has been a wonderful crop of alfalfa and red clover.

Douglas Has Turkey—A large stuffed turkey forms the background for the Douglas county exhibit. Samples of forage crops and grains occupy prominent positions while fruits, vegetables and nuts come in for their share of the attention. The center table features plates of apples, pears, peaches and grapes. Especial attention is called to the fact that 175,000 turkeys were raised there this year and will soon be ready for the market. During the past year 12,000,000 pounds of dried prunes have been produced. This county is famous for its melons. C. A. Garrett and J. C. Leedy are in charge of the booth and delight in calling attention to the great diversity of the crops in the county.

Linn Shows Crops—A solid mass of grain and forage crop samples adorn the rear wall of the Linn county booth at the fair this year. They have been placed in an arch formation with boxes of apples, pears and peaches on the incline. Canned fruit and honey is the central attraction on the shelves and the counter. Seeds, vegetables, eggs, dairy products and flour complete the exhibit. The annual income from dairy products totals about $1,000,000 while the field products total $2,800,000 in the year according to Leonard Gilkey who is in charge of the booth. Especial attention is called to the leather products display. These articles are all made in Albany. The possibilities of dairying in the county are great said Mr. Gilkey.

Lane Boasts Timber—"No county in Oregon has more standing timber than Lane county," reads the slogan of the Lane county booth. W. A. Ayres, market master at Eugene, A. H. Ross and Mable H. Chadwick are in charge and they call attention to the fact that the harvest of crops in their county created a payroll of over $600,000,000. The exhibits in the booth indicate a diversified community. Samples of grains and forage crops are to be found in abundance, while neatly packed boxes of apples, pears, plums, grapes and prunes line the sides of this booth. Vegetables of all kinds add to the arrangement, while canned goods, fruits on plates and grains in sacks attract the attention. The lumber industry is ably represented by some pictures.

Columbia Shows Variety—Columbia county has a highly varieted exhibit featuring forage crops and grain on the walls, while on the shelves are placed containers of all sorts of seeds. On the incline there are quantities of cheese and butter samples with a large centerpiece of eggs in the form of a star. A fine showing of orchard and field products occupy every corner of the booth. Clyde Watson is in charge of this booth and places especial emphasis upon the dairying and grain production of the county.

Josephine Proud of Climate—Josephine county proclaims, "It's the climate," with apples in a background of snow white eggs. The rear wall of the booth is decorated with three varieties of grapes in which the word "Josephine" is woven. Apples, pears, strawberries, corn, vegetables and other farm products fill the booth to capacity. In the center is located a model miniature farm with the slogan, "The farm of your dream may be realized in Josephine county." H. B. Howell, county agent, is in charge of the booth.

Sun For Clackamas—An electric light in the rear of the Clackamas county booth gives the appearance of the sun rising on some miniature farms. In one corner of this booth a dock is located throughout the exhibit, the shipping facilities are especially stressed. A slogan calls attention to the fact that "potatoes were the major crop," however the exhibits of wool, poultry, fruits, vegetables, and dairy products are emphasized. J. W. Robinson, who is in charge of the booth, called attention to the fact that over 250,000,000 feet of wood goes for pulp use each year. "Our bulb industry is one of the largest," declared Mr. Robinson, "and we have endeavored to feature our industries as well as the farming. This small concrete pavement around the booth is symbolic of our excellent roads."

Benton Shows Squash—A large 126 pound Green Fawcett squash is the center of attraction in the Benton county booth, which is presided over by W. L. Powell and W. A. Reed of Corvallis. Grains and forage crops are featured especially on the rear wall while a neat array of packed fruit, canned fruit and vegetables are on the shelves and the incline.

Lincoln Shows Off—The Lincoln county exhibit features their lumber industry through a series of remarkable pictures which adorn the rear wall of the booth. D. L. Peterson, secretary of the Toledo Chamber of Commerce, is in charge and he calls attention to the spruce display. For forage crops and vegetables he declared it was hard to beat Lincoln county. A mohair exhibit accentuates the fact that one of the largest pools exists in that section and that they have the finest of wool. A small display of agates proves to be the drawing exhibit and many people stop to admire and remark concerning these.

Grains, Fruits in Wasco—C. W. Day, county agent, designed the booth for Wasco county in which especial attention is called to the grain and fruits raised there. The average annual income from the products of the county amounts to about $5,000,000. There are over 60,000 acres of winter wheat and 5,000 acres of spring wheat according to Mr. White. In the center is placed a large stand covered with vegetables of all kinds and topped with celery and peppers.

Coos Features Lumber—"Lumbering is the main industry in Coos county," declared H. S. Hale while explaining the exhibit from that county. White fir, cedar and fir leads all other kinds. An arch in the rear of the booth is artistically decorated with corn and forage crops. The sign, "Gateway to the coast country," attracts the passerby and then J. G. Smith and H. S. Hale explain the wonders to be found in Coos county.

Washington Diversified—"Where diversified farming pays," is the slogan for Washington county. An artistic array of grains and forage crops are on the rear wall with miniature bales of hay as especially attractive features. Nuts, fruits and seeds add to the attractiveness of the booth, while onions, potatoes and corn are featured extensively. A miniature water wheel gives some interesting facts concerning the county, the lumber industry, the dairying, the farming and the various industries. There are some 3,646 acres of alfalfa in this county and 134,000 acres of cultivated soils.
