Back to Nature

Health authorities everywhere are advocating more of a natural diet—natural and unrefined foods—raw fruits and vegetables—vegetables cooked in specially constructed utensils with little or no water added—foods requiring thorough mastication—whole grains, etc.

They call attention to the health promoting value of the natural mineral salts found in such foods and the benefits to be derived from such practice.

Common sense tells us that these theories are sound and logical. We know that we should be more careful in the foods we choose.

But—this is the twentieth century. We have our refined and devitalized foods—white sugar—white flour—polished rice and similar products. We like our soft and over-cooked foods—mashed potatoes—gravies—pastries—deserts—delicacies—foods that tickle the palate and please the taste, with little thought given to the actual needs of the body. Many of us must eat in restaurants where only such foods are available.

Under these conditions, how are we to supply Nature with the vital working and building materials—natural iodine for the glands—natural iron for the blood—natural magnesium for the nerves—natural chlorine—potassium—sodium—etc? How are we to maintain the normal chemical balance to insure the natural harmony and proper functioning of all organs—to maintain a rich and healthy blood stream to enable Nature to combat ailments common to this age?

Here is the answer.
