RAIN

Frank Jenkins, editor of the Eugene Register, is on his way east; writing his editorials as he goes. The following are excerpts taken from the current one:

"It was raining in Spokane." "In the diner at noon a misanthropic Montanan was lecturing upon the climate of his home state. 'Oh!' he said in response to a question, 'the climate of Montana is all right, but it has its little drawbacks. For one thing, the sleighing is so passed rotten in July and August.'"

"It was raining still in North Dakota." "N. B. It is raining in Minnesota—raining as if it never meant to stop. There is reasonably dependable evidence that it has been raining since somewhere back about the time of the flood. And I am confidently anticipating that somebody is going to find out that I am from Oregon and then tell me, with a pessimistic shake of the head, that Oregon is a great state, but that he doesn't believe he'd like to live out there because of the excessive rainfall."

In North Dakota only a small fraction of the grain has been threshed. No wonder the Nonpartisan league flourishes in that state.

A PROMISING DECADE AHEAD

(The following leading editorial in the Portland Telegram says a good deal of what The Statesman in its annual Slogan issue on Manufacturing has been saying for nine years, applying the facts and conclusions to Salem instead of Portland, as the center of great potential resources in the way of unlimited supplies of raw materials for factories. Following is the Telegram article:)

"The greatest business growth of the next decade will be on the Pacific coast."

This interesting prognostication recently came to the attention of virtually every business baron and outstanding financier of the country.

It wasn't free advice, either.

It was a report of the Babson Statistical Organization, which, if nothing else, is the highest priced statistical service and business forecast that the American business men can purchase.

Roger W. Babson himself is responsible for the prediction. He took a swing through the Pacific coast states during the summer, and returned to his east pretty thoroughly imbued with the idea that the Pacific coast is just about to have its inning.

"There now are opportunities to buy property and secure business locations on the coast such as one remembers ten years ago in Chicago and twenty years ago in New York," he points out significantly.

In his copyrighted report on "Opportunities on the Pacific Coast," he has but one refrain and he sings it lustily.

He concludes, in type that is larger and blacker—

"Again we say that great advances in the next decade are coming on the Pacific."

"Wise are those who make at least some of their investments so as to capitalize these developments."

The same sentiments expressed by the Portland Chamber of Commerce, for instance, would be subject to a big discount or "boosting."

Expressed by the famed Mr. Babson, they are going to start some thinking, and where there has already been thinking, they are going to provoke some action.

Was a time, not so far distant, when the New England states had a corner on the wheels of industry. They had water power, population, transportation and the notion that their industrial position was impregnable.

Not so today. This disintegration of manufacturing in the New England states is a fact.

Cotton manufacturers are going south. Woolen manufacturers are going west.

Furniture manufacturers long since have gone to Grand Rapids, and now Grand Rapids is coming to Oregon.

And so on, down the list.

The big manufacturing movement of today is toward the source of the raw materials.

Labor is something that industry finds it can take with it.

Transportation follows potential tonnage, and is already widely diffused.

Power is only 2 1/2 per cent of manufacturing costs, and can be brought to the industry, even in the form of coal or fuel oil, more cheaply than raw materials can be brought to the power.

Raw materials are the governing factor. The west has them.

Portland particularly is tributary to the largest storehouse of natural resources in the nation today. It is tributary to the largest potential agricultural development in the entire west.

Portland, however, has more than the raw materials.

It has labor—a better class of labor, intelligent, home-loving, and enjoying life and its luxuries at one-third less cost than in the east.

Portland has the power—both developed and potential. It compares favorably with any on the coast, and is far ahead of those of eastern cities. Nearly half of all the potential power of the nation is in the Pacific northwest.

Portland has an ideal climate for industry—subject to neither extreme heat nor cold.

Portland has transportation—rail and marine—with the ships of the world calling at its port.

Portland already is an outstanding industrial city. The next decade should indeed see it a much greater one.

Five tons of peppermint oil started from Salem yesterday to one of the great gum factories of the east. Refined oil. The buyers know what they are getting, from the samples sent. This advantage, with the others that affect quality, per acre production, comparatively low overhead, etc., are bound to fix Salem as the great peppermint oil center of the United States—as surely as that water will seek its level.

The greatest man in his field of this age, or any age, John Philip Sousa, is a guest of Salem today.

WED 29 YEARS, SEEK DIVORCE

Commencing her suit just two days before her 29th wedding anniversary, Mrs. Carrie Krutz yesterday filed complaint in circuit court asking a divorce from her husband, Monroe Krutz. The couple were married in Polk county October 12 1898.

The plaintiff alleges in her complaint that her husband on a number of occasions imbibed too freely of intoxicating liquor, getting drunk and assaulting her. During the month of January, 1925, he knocked her down and waved a revolver at her, terrifying her completely, she claims, stating that since that time she and her spouse have lived apart from each other.

All property rights between the two have been settled out of court, the complaint explains.

A minor child, Edna Kreutz, who was born to the two in 1916, is to be cared for by Mrs. Paul Johnson of Silverton, a married sister, if the terms of the complaint are carried out.

ANNUAL DINNER WELL ATTENDED AT Y. M. C. A.

man Stanley, gave a brief resume of the past year's work—the first year in the new building. "Looking Ahead" was the subject delegated to Mr. Abrams. The speaker stated that it was impossible to look ahead without first "looking back" for the reason that it was only by reviewing what had been accomplished that any predictions could be made as to what might be done in the future.

"A year ago," said Mr. Abrams, "you people gave us the charge of going ahead with this plan. Then you went about your business and forgot, so to speak, that you had a Y. M. C. A. Now you are back again to see what we did."

At this juncture the speaker referred to the gathering to a parallel at each person's plate reviewing in detail some of the things accomplished. "Read that," said Mr. Abrams, "and you won't need to listen to me. It tells the story."

Among the major activities was listed the fact that 8000 people had been employed during the year. 29,000 men and boys used the gymnasium, religious work insured, and on down the list of some 60 or 70 activities started and carried to a successful conclusion.

The biggest applause of the evening came during Mr. Abrams' talk when he mentioned the name of C. A. Kell's, a "human dynamo."

As described by the speaker, it was unnecessary for more to be said; the applause at the mention of the name "Kell's" told the story. It was in which he held a position, vividly than words could possibly have done. And all the time Kell's was nowhere to be seen. Someone who did not know him personally, but who noticed him attending to some menial details about the hall, asked if he was the chief in charge of the banquet. Such is the modesty of greatness.

Ray Miller, in charge of the work of citizenship being pushed by the organization, gave a pretty complete report on the work of that department.

The main speaker of the evening, Lawrence J. Todnem, was then introduced by Harry Stone of Portland. Todnem has spent the past 12 years doing Y. M. C. A. work in China, and that country and its present unfortunate conditions, with a prediction of the future, was the subject of his speech.

"In traveling about the United States since my return from China," began Mr. Todnem, "people have addressed numerous questions to me about China. Three main questions seem to sum up their desire for enlightenment—'First—What is the future of China. Second—What is it all about, and third—What is the future of the religious work being done there.'"

"Let me say at the outset," continued the speaker, "that China will work out her own problems—in time. She will take her place among nations, but how soon it is difficult to say. Some people think ten years from now will see all domestic problems settled."

Mr. Todnem rather startled his audience right on the start by declaring that the United States was responsible for the revolution in China, but immediately went on to explain.

fath, has gone into China to expand her trade. She has shown the ignorant Chinaman a "new trick" so to speak. Our modern clothes, our implements of industry, our new inventions in science; all of these new things we have displayed before the Chinese man's eyes and he liked it. He said 'I want that' and a commercial trade was set up that has completely revolutionized commerce within their own country. Complications have arisen from this sudden change in business.

"Next came our men of the cloth and showed the Chinese the Christian religion. That also was taken up, almost as quickly as the products of industry. But there was a factor that did not take to all this new fardangleism from the United States. Their business was hurt; their religious customs were being disturbed; their racial habits were interfered with. It has resulted in the revolution that is sweeping over that country tonight."

The speaker paid splendid tribute to the type of religious workers there. He told his audience that the threat of death from those who are endeavoring to stamp out the new religion has been no deterrent to their determination to carry the gospel of Christ to the backward natives. He declared that the Y. M. C. A. is the militant religious organization in China and their work is going steadily on and turning out a list of educated young men who, just as fast, are identifying themselves with the progress wing of politics and are becoming leaders in the new China.

"All is turmoil there now," said Mr. Todnem. "But don't worry about it. All will come right in time but it will only be by the work of the Chinese themselves. No outside agency can decide the outcome."

BITS FOR BREAKFAST

John Philip Sousa himself—

World's greatest band man, in an honored guest of Salem today. Who has not been thrilled by his music?

Five tons of peppermint oil in a single shipment started east from Salem yesterday—refined oil. At the term contract price, this represents a value of $40,000 to $45,000. At the top price of a couple of years ago, it would have been around $300,000. This product, the peppermint oil center of the country, as it certainly will become, this will mean a magnet for a high pile of $20 gold pieces each year; or $100 notes. And from long distances. And new money each year, minted from our soil and showers and sunshine.

"A nation's menace—her children." That is the heading of the leading news article in the current issue of the Dearborn Independent, Henry Ford's newspaper. The two concluding sentences are these: "The menace we face is that one generation can destroy a nation. No non-Christian nation has ever preserved its civil liberties."

"Our nation's hope—her children." That is the other side of the shield, Charles J. Fingar, the writer of the article in Mr. Ford's newspaper, should have been at the Salem Y annual meeting and banquet last night.

The full program of the Salem Y is the greatest hope we have for the youth of Salem.

Did you realize that the Salem Y is the first and so far the only association in the world having a junior board? And such a bunch! In initiative, pep, vision and strenuous activity, they can give the senior board cards and spades, and then beat them to a frazzle. And this is not meant for an allegorical stone cast at the senior board, either.

FEDERALS WIN FIGHT AGAINST MUTINEERS for their usual conference with General Alvarez. The president expressed extreme happiness at the outcome. He declared that a death blow had been given the revolution and that the movement had been utterly crushed. He declined, however, to give a formal interview for publication, leaving his chief of staff to make a public statement.

Although Gomez and Almada have succeeded in eluding capture, headquarters here is certain that they will be taken soon, or reduced to the status of mere bandits, refugees in the mountains, without any appreciable number of followers.

The battle between the federals and rebels began at 2 o'clock Sunday afternoon, and continued fiercely until 8 o'clock in the evening. By that time Gomez and Almada were in flight and their followers were either captured, dead

Nogales Checks Up

NOGALES, Oct. 10.—(SP)—Official advices tonight to the Nogales Herald report a major battle between federals and revolutionists under Arnulfo Gomez in the state of Vera Cruz, within 22 miles of the city of Vera Cruz. The federals claimed victory. No details were given.

Mediano Tellechea, half brother of Gomez, who made his escape following his arrest at Nav-ojo, Sonora, Mexico, last week and with 25 followers headed north into the state of Sinaloa, was reported in another dispatch to have been killed by federal troops.

The pursuing troops overtook Tellechea and his followers near Rosario, Sinaloa this morning. The majority of Tellechea's followers fell on the field of battle with their leader.

Revolt Near End

MEXICO CITY, Oct. 10.—(AP)—Land and water forces of the Mexican government are being concentrated in an effort to bottle up the rebels under Generals Gomez and Almada in the rugged mountain country of the Perote region, state of Vera Cruz where they are hidden, to prevent them from reaching the seacoast and escaping from Mexico.

The federal strategy seeks to drive in on the rebels from every direction by greatly superior forces and destroy them by aerial bombardment. The authorities at every Mexican port and the officers in command of all the ships of the Mexican navy have been ordered to exercise the utmost vigilance, so that if Gomez and Almada do succeed in reaching the coast, their escape shall be cut off.

forefront are joining the field forces to complete the surrounding movement. Simultaneously the air forces are scouting in an effort to destroy, or bomb, the rebels into submission.

Lieutenant Carranza, who recently made the first non-stop flight from Mexico City to Juarez, is expected to be one of the foremost aces in the air campaign. Five planes flew to the front from Mexico City today to reinforce the airplanes already operating, the strength of which has not officially been revealed.

Campaign Active

Extensive troop movements continue. Trains are bringing in to Mexico City soldiers from various parts of the country. Some are remaining in the capital, in readiness to use wherever needed; others are being dispatched to Vera Cruz, with their ultimate destination the fastnesses where Gomez and Almada and their men have sought refuge. Unofficially it is estimated that 5,000 federal troops are at present moving toward Perote.

If this and previous unofficial estimates are correct, it means that the government soon will have 15,000 troops engaged in the movement against the two chief leaders in the revolt.

Official information still places the Gomez-Almada forces at a maximum of 1500 or 2,000 men.
