HIGH JAPANESE IDEALS

Reverting to the rebuke delivered to the Nordic snobs in the Orient by United States Senator Bingham of Connecticut, mentioned on this page of Wednesday's Statesman, it is interesting to refer to a message of a delegate from Japan to the Rotary International convention in Ostend, Belgium, in June.

Rotarian Masatoshi Fusiwara of Tokyo, Japan, representing the Rotary club of that city, presenting a Japanese flag to the convention, said:

"It was the privilege of my country of Japan to enter into Rotary in the year 1920. We now have five clubs in the principal cities—in Tokyo, Kyoto, Nagoya, Kobe and Osaka.

"Not the least of the things of which I am proud is the fact that I am a charter member of the Tokyo club, and from this club of Tokyo it is my great pleasure to bring you greetings.

"Allow me to give you some idea as to why we Japanese are interested in Rotary. Let me give you some notion of the motives that prevail in the minds of the Japanese people. We are convinced that the true goal of human life is the same all over the world and amongst all sorts and conditions of people. We Japanese know as well as any other people that no one is born into the world to live a selfish life or to live for himself. We realize also that no one would die for his own interest, but rather for some other person, or for his own people, or for some great cause.

"We believe that humanity's supreme interest and purpose is humanity, and that man's best endeavor should be spent for man. And we are the more confident of the truth of this gospel because it has a scientific basis in the fact that all animal beings struggle, not for themselves but for others. The birds build nests, not for themselves, but for the birds of the future. The lion roars, not for himself, but for the lions that are yet to be.

"In Japan we are endeavoring to 'play the game' as they say in the West, especially in England, as a civilized nation, eager to learn, ardent to love, keen to play our part in civilization's perfect purposes. There are those who have the impression that the Japanese are a warlike nation. This is very erroneous and wrong. Even a superficial study of Japan's history would show to any one that she has never in her history tried to expand by her own will, she has never had what are called 'imperialistic' ideas.

"It is true that she, like many other nations, not least the immortal nation under whose hospitality we are so glad to meet at this international congress of peace, has, at times, had to fight for the nation's existence. Japan has to her great credit in this matter of national aggressiveness, the very significant fact that for centuries she shut herself out completely from contact with the world outside herself—that speaks for itself.

"She awoke seventy years ago, and at once she set upon the work of raising humanity to a higher plane of life and happiness. She took eagerly all the good motives that tend in that direction and embraced all the advantages the West had to offer. Hence Japan's constitution, her civil code, her organization of courts, her process of law, and not least her establishments of Sunday rest are in accordance with what prevail in Christian countries.

"This is Japan, and from this country of mine I bring greetings to you.

Those are the sentiments of a man representing a people whose pride is constantly wounded by the Nordic snobocracy of certain of our nationals in their country, and the nationals of England and other lands. No wonder Senator Bingham was bitter in his words of rebuke. He saw enough to make the blood boil; the blood of any one with the instincts of a gentleman or the ideas of common justice and decency.

THE GENEROUS FOUR

(Portland Telegram)

The valuable Oregon library of the late Frederick V. Holman will go to the Historical society which had for twenty years honored him as its president.

The society acquires the precious collection through the generosity of four public spirited citizens. They are: Judge Charles H. Carey and Leslie M. Scott of Portland, A. N. Bush of Salem and T. C. Elliott of Walla Walla, all of them collectors of books on the Oregon country who would have welcomed many of the Holman volumes on their own shelves, and who have bought the books and self denyingly surrendered them to the guardianship of the Oregon Historical society.

Flayed by this quartet of benefactors. The treasures they have saved to Oregon are already interesting and valuable, but as the years pass, they will become priceless mines of source materials in the history of the Pacific northwest, the Oregon Country of the pioneers.

Young Walter Hill's life has been "just one darn wife after another." Comes now his Broadway beauty of the New York Phillips and asks for $25,000 attorney fees to dish out to some little lawyer while he attends to the little matter of her divorce; and, incidentally, she would like $2500 a week maintenance thereafter. This makes the third time that young Walter has been vamped and trimmed. The last one cost him a cool million. It's a great business, spearing these fellows with the money. If they happen to make the right kind of a husband, well and good; if not, that's all right too. The divorce court is always handy and a good lawyer can generally take friend hubby to the cleaners for a "handsome" settlement.

ALMOST SAME HERE

The Portland Telegram of last evening said: "A Portland factory can deliver its products to any seaport in the world, to any of the inland cities of the eastern states, and to the eleven western states, at a lower transportation cost than a factory located at any of the manufacturing centers of the middle west. Four transcontinental railway systems, three Pacific northwest roads, and a score of steamship lines serve the Portland area's factories and mills. The railway water grade through the mountains, the only such in the Pacific coast states, gives the Portland territory a rate advantage not enjoyed by other coast cities. Portland's harbor is one of the finest anywhere; it is the only fresh water harbor on the Pacific coast; and is from 32 to 72 miles nearer the ocean than the Puget sound ports. Government reports show that ships are less likely to encounter fog in the Columbia river than at any other Pacific coast port. These advantages assure for Portland a prominent role in the industrial development of the Pacific coast."

That is well said, by the Portland Telegram. And every advantage mentioned by the Telegram for Portland will be possessed by Salem—

When we have still water in the Willamette— When we have a barge and boating stage the year through—

As we are going to have— With a difference of not more than 5 cents a ton for taking our products in manufactured or other form from Salem to Portland and delivering them directly into the holds of ships bound for foreign ports.

And this difference of 5 cents a ton will be more than made up by the cheaper overhead in Salem, and the lesser labor costs, due to lower living costs here.

Some day, both sides of the Willamette river from Salem to Portland will be lined with factories and warehouses and docks.

A former Salem man, now in the east, noticing that great rayon mills are being built in sections of the country not nearly as well supplied with pulp woods as this section, wants to know why Salem does not go out after some of these mills. Why? Further reference will be made to this matter in a few days.

Salem manufacturers are taking care of some of the by-products. There are many other opportunities in this line, and will be more as we get more factories.

Bits For Breakfast

Busy days here— Getting the new Statesman press to going—

And it will print a section of the Sunday paper, according to present plans.

The great trouble with infantile paralysis seems to be that no one knows the name or the exact character of the bug that makes the scourge.

The county health heads tell some things in The Statesman of this morning that are very interesting to the mothers and fathers of this section—about how to prevent the spread of the disease.

During his visit to a village school a diocesan inspector of religious knowledge put this question to a class of little girls: "If all the good people were white and all the bad people were black, what color would you be?" Some promptly answered "White," and others "Black." But little Mary replied, "Please, sir, I would be all streaky!"

The 1927 cider product is a delectable beverage compared to the "apple juice" of grandfather's day—especially if the drinker happened around while the cider was "in the makin'." Flavored by rotten spots, worm holes (to refrain from mentioning the occupants of the holes) and other things too numerous to mention, from outside sources! But today what could be more pleasing to the modern taste than a drink of sparkling red Wealthy or milky Maiden Blush cider, made from clean, unblemished fruit, the result of proper pruning and spraying, and pressed out in a clean cider press that is dirt and weather proof?

The great tragedy of autumn is that the handsome life guards at last have to slip shirts over those big, brown shoulders.

Care of Babies

Why do so many, many babies of today escape all the little fretful spells and infantile ailments that used to worry mothers through the day, and keep them up half the night? If you don't know the answer, you haven't discovered pure, harmless Castoria. It is sweet to the taste, and sweet in the little stomach. And its gentle influence seems felt all through the tiny system. Not even a distasteful dose of castor oil does so much good. And it is so pleasant to take. Taste it yourself, and you'll know why "Children Cry for It."

Fletcher's Castoria is purely vegetable, so you may give it freely, at first sign of colic; or when you even suspect the approach of constipation, or diarrhea. Or those many times when you just don't know what is the matter. For real sickness, call the doctor, always. At other times, a few drops of Fletcher's Castoria. See how quickly all fretfulness or waterfulness will cease! Only one word of warning: the above advice is true of genuine

COOLIDGE PUTS VETO TO 3RD TERM REPORT

Coolidge will be drafted. I cannot see how any man could turn down such an appeal unless it was because of poor health—and Mr. Coolidge is not in poor health."

Declaring that in spite of the scolding he received today he would not discontinue "talking about the president's future," the Ohioan said even the president's statement that he had no desire to have the country think that Senator Fess was talking for him would have no effect on him.

"Mr. Coolidge is afraid that the people will think I am reflecting on his views," he added, "but I told him plainly that I have never given out that impression and, in fact, I was always careful to explain that I was airing solely my own views."

Personal Politics Hinted— Senator Fess, who must stand for re-election in Ohio next year in case he chooses to run again for the senate, declared also that Mr. Coolidge had expressed the view that his statements might be taken as accelerating his own senatorial ambitions.

"Nothing is farther from the truth," he added. "We could not elect a delegation in Ohio that would be anti-Coolidge. My statements have reflected only my honest judgment."

In reply to a question as to why he elected to unburden himself regarding his conference with the president, Senator Fess declared he did so because he wanted it clearly understood that Mr. Coolidge did not wish him to be put down "as the White House spokesman," and that it would hereafter be known he was speaking only his own judgment.

Fess' Part Recalled— In addition to having always been a strong administration partisan, Senator Fess was one of the first to predict the president's re-nomination after Mr. Coolidge's statement in Rapid City that he did not choose to run in 1928. This prediction drew no reaction from the White House but today's rebuke was the outgrowth of several repetitions by the Ohio senator in Washington, New York and his own state of what he thought would happen next year.

This statement, it was recalled, is the second to be administered to Senator Fess from the White House. Last winter during a discussion of what the president would do regarding farm relief, it was stated on behalf of Mr. Coolidge bluntly that neither Senator Fess nor any other senator was commissioned to speak for him on the floor of the senate.

GUARD AGAINST INFANT DISEASE ADVICE ISSUED (Continued from Page One) Marion county health unit. The full text of the letter reads as follows: "In view of the prevalence of infantile paralysis in various parts of Oregon, the Marion county health unit has been planning the ways in which we can most effectively protect the health of the children in Marion county.

We are, therefore, issuing this bulletin for the information of the teachers, and to solicit their active cooperation in carrying out our plan. The best public advice that we can secure is that it is very much safer to keep the schools open and inspect the children daily for any symptoms of beginning disease.

"It may be well to say to the teachers that infantile paralysis affects children almost exclusively, and that the teacher need have no fear of contracting the disease if she exercises ordinary care.

"We would suggest the following procedure during the prevalence of this disease:

1. Each teacher should look carefully at the children each day at the opening of school for any manifestation of illness. Any child who shows any symptoms of fever or vomiting should be sent home at once and the nurse in the district notified. The nurse will visit the home and either readmit the child to school, or have him seen by the county health officer.

2. Be sure and enforce strictly the ruling that no child shall return to school after an illness without a proper permit from the family physician, the nurse, or the county health officer.

"We are advising parents as follows: 1. Any child who is ill should be kept at home, and the family physician called to determine the nature of the illness.

Do not have your child visit in homes where there is sickness of any character, until the danger of infantile paralysis is over.

3. Do not invite visitors having children from outside of Marion county, particularly from areas
