SEARCH CONTINUES FOR MISSING GIRL

Inez Fredericks Rests in Hospital at Hood River; Speculation Rife

HOOD RIVER, Ore., Oct. 20.—(AP)—Did a railroad accident spare Inez Fredericks, 16, a far greater tragedy?

Tonight she rested in a hospital here, a foot crushed by the wheels of a freight train. Monday night she and a girl companion disappeared. Her companion has not been found. Fear that the other girl, Alice Walters, 14 years old, is the victim of a far worse misfortune than that which befell Inez, is spurring police in a search for the girl. Sheriff Edick said tonight he has information that the young girl had a rendezvous with a former convict who schemed to bring them to Portland that he might turn them over to a white slave ring of forgers.

Demonstration this week at Giese Powers. Police who were here today, said, when she, Alice and two unidentified men were trying to board a freight train at Cascade Locks en route to Portland. For an undetermined time the two girls had been in a lonesome shack at Cascade Locks. A hand bag and clothing belonging to the Walters girl was found in the old building today. Officers believe the girls and men who had lured them away, had used the shack as a meeting place.

All roads leading to Portland are being patrolled by police. And in Portland all bridges are under guard of officers. The Women's Protective League of this state has launched an intensive effort to solve the mystery.

S. E. SALEM TO OPPOSE INCINERATOR LOCATION

Council fails to withdraw its plan, an attorney will be employed, and a temporary injunction applied for.

Dancy opened the meeting with a presentation of why the committee had decided on the two-acre plot. He pointed out that the city was badly pressed for money, that the plot had been offered for $257, that the site was one where there were no immediate residences, and none in prospect, and that the site would not be covered with water at any time of the year.

One of the citizens asked why the present city dump could not be converted into an incinerator site. "It would cost $5,000," declared Mr. Dancy.

Other members proposed the Oregon Electric gravel pit, a site in Polk county across the river, and various places along the river in the north end.

All of them were declared by Mr. Dancy to be impossible to secure, even if they were desirable.

Alderman Purvise, who favors erecting the incinerator on some site in North Salem suitable for a sewer disposal plant contemplated for some time in the future, asserted the Bush property near the state Mute school, "We'd face an immediate injunction from the board of control," returned Dancy.

Alderman Purvise pointed out that a year ago the United States government notified the city officials that the Willamette river would have to be cleaned up, and that the city would be required to build a sewer disposal plant. The city of Portland was notified to that effect also, and investigations were started to determine the cost. It was found that $35,000,000 would be required to effect such a system in Portland, so the matter was quietly dropped. It is understood that the government will not press installation of the plants.

Alderman Rosebrough declared that it would be 15 or 20 years before the city would build a sewer disposal plant, and by that time another incinerator would be required. The two, he said, could be built together then in the north end.

The fact that the incinerator was odorless in operation was stressed by the councilmen. "The incinerator will be sold to us on a guarantee to that effect," said Alderman Dancy. "If it is not odorless, we will not accept it."

Among other objections raised by members were that the wagons passing to and fro in that district conveying garbage would be unsanitary, and that tin cans would not burn in the incinerator, requiring much re-hauling because

There were an sanitary fills in that district. They were assured that wagons were at the present time passing to and fro in that district, that the wagons would be covered when full of garbage enroute to the plant, and thoroughly scalded when emptied, and that the residue from tin cans would be small in amount.

Two members testified that incinerators in other towns in which they had lived had been odorless, and Alderman Dancy cited two or three cities which had incinerators in the downtown sections and thought nothing of it.

Councilmen Dancy and Rosebrough, when leaving the meeting, indicated that they would go ahead with plans to locate the incinerator on the site contemplated. They expressed confidence that the city would be successful in case a legal fight was necessary.
