KEEP SCHOOLS OPEN STRICKER'S ADVIce

of Epidemic, Says State Health Officer

By Frederick D. Stricker, Collaborating Epidemiologist Boards of health and school directors are often at a loss whether to close schools or to keep them open in the presence of an outbreak of communicable disease. The problem is not so difficult with the milder infections, as pub-PORTLAND, Ore., Nov. 9.—(AP).—

With the continued high prevalence of diphtheria, scarlet fever or infantile paralysis in a community the health officials are often obliged to consider whether or not schools should be closed. One may well ask, here, what forces health authorities to close schools in such circumstances. In general the answer is the pressure of pubde opinion.

The public can scarcely be blamed for wanting schools closed. They have been led, for years, to believe that the closing of the Sheep and lambs fully steady; receipts schools would stop an outbreak of contagious disease. School su-

Under such conditions, with public opinion clamoring that 'something be done' one can hardly blame the press for following what would seem sound, namely public opinion. It is unfortunate when the officials of a community do not act together.

The community in which the educational and health authorities work together for the common good is fortunate.
