WHAT SALEM MAKES MAKES SALEM

One of the small cities on the west side of the Willamette has a new industry. It is a factory for making candied fruits; putting apples, pears, prunes and other home grown fruits in the form of delectable confections, and adding a few walnuts in each package to enhance its attractiveness and toothsomeness.

And that is a fine idea. It should go far.

There is room for a vast enlarging of the idea. Salem has several prune and walnut preparations that ought to be pushed. Our people are interested in a prune drink factory in Portland. It should be brought here and the idea

And we should be making maraschino cherries here. On a large scale. Using a considerable proportion of our sweet fered last night were "Mooncherry crop.

We should get a potato starch, flour and dextrine factory, and this is more than possible, soon.

We are doing wonderfully well in our cannery and barrel- ful addition to the evening's ening plant developments, but we should have jam and jelly joyment. plants. There are great expansions possible in this field. Its development would put the Oregon gooseberry industry was notable as was also that of on the map in big letters.

We should can asparagus on a large scale, comparable to the immensity of that industry in California.

All the small new factories we have been getting, where they have good reasons for being, ought to be expanded.

Payrolls is what Salem needs most now. Payrolls de-loner by Miss Stone and her sewpending on raw materials from the industries on the land. The idea of making up attractive packages of our nuts Moore and Carlton Roth, obtained and fruits, being followed out by Earl Pearcy, is a splendid elaborate lighting effects which

And we should, of course, chief of all other things at ent in hand, put the linen mills on their feet thoroughly let them have a chance to expand; to invite specialty mills waiting to come. Provide them with their raw materials, "Danse Macabre" ... Saint Saens the linen varns.

We should soon double the number of our manufacturing Olive Smith, Harry Skelton, Kenneth Abbot, Walter Enifeldt, and concerns, and help to make those already here larger and vance Norton. more prosperous, to the end that they may employ more
