COOLIDGE PUTS LAST CHANCE BEHIND HIM

tions toward a renomination. He did it in these six sentences: "This is naturally the time to be planning for the future. The party will soon place in nomination its candidate to succeed me.

"To give time for mature deliberation I stated to the country on August 2 that I did not choose to run for president in 1928. My statement stands; no one should be led to suppose that I have modified it. My decision will be respected.

"After I had been eliminated the party began, and should vigorously continue, the serious task of selecting another candidate from among the numbers of distinguished men available."

Words Come As Postscript—His only reference to this subject was contained in a very brief postscript to a prepared speech discussing republican political issues generally.

Only a few of the committee men who are in Washington to select next year's convention city, had any inkling that such a declaration was coming. It had been generally understood among them that they might expect from the president no elaboration of the statement of August 2, but would listen only to a general discussion of party issues.

Such a discussion, prepared in advance, was delivered by the chief executive and as he went ahead defining some of the party issues the impression seemed to grow among some of his listeners that he might be outlining a platform upon which he could stand in 1928. Then, at the very end of the speech, he turned suddenly from general issues to pronounce the words that reaffirmed and elaborated what he had said in August about his own intentions.

Moment Psychological—Not only does the president's new declaration come at the moment his party leaders are assembled in the capital to make their first plans for 1928 but it finds congress just getting under way for a session wherein each of the major parties hopes to write a record to put before the voters in the next campaign.

Only today the president's annual message, outlining a legislative program, was placed before the new senate and house. Doubtless politics will furnish much of the background for the session and some of Mr. Coolidge's friends think he may have decided that his own part in the legislative developments of the next few months would be less open to partisan attack if it were understood now that he regards himself as eliminated from the field of candidates.

OLD GLORY OVER CAPITOL AGAIN

Old Glory, which flies from the top of the national capitol at Washington, while congress is in session, is flung to the winds again as congress gathers for its seventy-ninth session.

may be interpreted by those who thus far have persisted in advocating his renomination, it seems certain that one effect will be to stimulate activity on behalf of those who have been brought forward to succeed him.

Already campaigns of considerable proportions are under way for Secretary Hoover, Frank O. Lowden and others. Senator Curtis of Kansas, has definitely announced his candidacy and another group including Vice President Dawes, Speaker Longworth, Senator Willis of Ohio and Senator Watson of Indiana had been actively talked of among the party leaders.

Cities Seek Convention—Assured that the president had no preference, delegations representing a number of cities seeking the next republican convention fought hard today to retain the support of national committee members they had received before Chairman Butler announced that he favored Kansas City. The committee which will make a selection tomorrow heard arguments of the contesting groups at lengthy sessions today.

Chairman Butler held out for Kansas City, despite a White House statement that President Coolidge had no choice and be-ance of a coalition which would upset Mr. Butler's plans.

Detroit, Frisco Join
The California committee men declined to disclose the exact nature of the coalition, but there were reports that Detroit and San Francisco supporters were lined up to defeat Kansas City in the event that neither of them was selected in the early balloting.

In the absence of any definite information as to just what turn this coalition would take, it was impossible to determine which of the cities which have ranked second in interest stood a good chance of being selected but it was apparent that Cleveland, Chicago and Philadelphia were prepared to push their cause until more definite indications were forthcoming.

While the exact time of selecting the convention depended on the length to which arguments would be extended, it was expected that a vote would be reached by noon tomorrow at the latest. The committee halted the arguments late today to go to the White House to be received by President
