

TEX RICKARD WINS FIGHT WITH MULLEN

NEW YORK, Mar. 14.—(AP)—The promotional battle of Tex Rickard and Jim Mullen for the right to stage a lightweight championship match between Sammy Mendell, the titleholder and Jimmy McLarin, Pacific coast sensation, ended today in a complete victory for the czar of Madison Square Garden.

While the flashlights of photographers hoomed in Rickard's office and Mullen hooped threats of injunction suits in Chicago, the managers of both fighters signed a contract for a 15 round match on May 17 at the Polo grounds here. The contract awarded Mendell 37 1/2 percent of the gate receipts, McLarin 12 1/2. Rickard believes the match will draw about $200,000.

Money-dickering for the bout became heated following upon Mullen's sensational one round knockout of Sid Terris here several weeks ago. Mullen who had Mendell's signature to a contract ending for a fight with McLarin in Chicago June 21, failed to tie the baby faced Irishman to an agreement before Rickard gained an option on McLarin's services. After weeks of negotiation, Rickard finally won the champion to his side when Mullen's constantly rising offers failed to lure McLarin back to Chicago.

After signing the contracts, Rickard snapped his desk shut for his third vacation of the winter season. He will leave tomorrow for a two weeks' stay in Miami, Fla., where the scrambled condition of the heavyweight elimination tournament will come in for serious discussion with Gene Tunney, possessor of a million dollar contract with Rickard, for a title defense this year.

WHOLE FAMILY TAKEN

KLAMATH FALLS, Ore., Mar. 14.—(AP)—"Entire family lost." Not a Comedy

To folks of the sunny south and other mild points, the costume of Jenson R. Heaton may seem to be a burlesque football uniform, but it isn't. Heaton is wearing the regulation togs of a skeleton bob sleigh racer, in which event he came in second at the Olympic games in Switzerland. His brother, John, was first.

Sports Done Brown

By Norman E. Brown

Is it good sportsmanship in basketball to "freeze" the ball to hold a lead as the game nears the close? This always has been a much-mooted question.

The question was revived during the annual southern inter-collegiate basketball tourney just ended at Atlanta, Ga. Georgia Tech, home town entry in the tournament which draws the cream of the college teams below the Mason and Dixon line, was faced with the problem of deciding the issue.

Tech met Auburn university in one of the quarter-final games. One minute before the final whistle was due to blow, Tech led, 29 to 28.

Under the stalling system, it would have been proper for Tech to have "frozen" the ball by simply ignoring chances to add to their score and engineering a safe passing game below their own basket for 60 seconds.

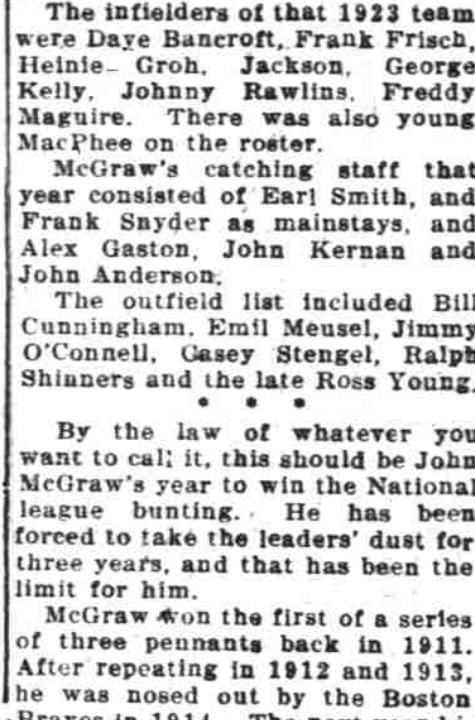

Apparently, however, Tech chose to play the game out. There was a dash toward Auburn's basket, and a futile shot for another two points. Auburn got the ball. There was a second wild dash down the floor, a last desperate shot by one of the Auburn players, James, and the score stood 30 to 29 in favor of Auburn. The whistle blew just as a Tech player tried a shot from mid-floor. The ball hit the edge of the basket, flirited with the inner side of it, and then bounced out. Tech was eliminated from the tournament.

Now, the try for the basket that proved to be Tech's undoing wasn't necessary. As a matter of fact, it was a foolish effort. The shot was made from the corner of the court—the most difficult angle on the floor. Only once in a blue moon do these side shots find the netting.

On the other hand, Tech's apparent decision to play the game that way gave the fans a great display of sportsmanship.

Incidentally, the winning Auburn basket was shot by one of two twins on Auburn's five—the James twins. It took the official scorers five minutes to find out which one shot the basket. The only possible way of identifying

WHERE MOSLEM KING THREATENS

Frontier fighting in Iraq and Transjordan, believed at first to have been the work of local Arabian rulers, is now reported to be headed by Ibn Saud, king of the Hedjaz, whom dispatches indicate as having declared war on Great Britain. With 20,000 tribesmen reported marching on Transjordan and Iraq, Great Britain has only one battalion of British and one battalion of Indian troops at Iraq and a few companies in Palestine for defense. Additional troops would have to be transported by rail from Egypt to Palestine and thence by motor to Mesopotamia.

Awaiting the returns from the first installment of income taxes which must be paid up by tomorrow, the senate finance committee is suspending judgment on what total to insert in the tax reduction measure it received some time ago
