Little Stories Great Hymns

JUST AS I AM, WITHOUT ONE

Charlotte Elliott, 1789-1871
"Just as I am, without one plea,
"But that Thy blood was shed for me,
"And that Thou bid'st me come to Thee,
"O Lamb of God! I come, I come!"

No other hymn, it is easy to say, has had greater evangelistic power over souls, which wavered, than this simple song of faith by an alling English woman, who by her works rose to the first ranks of women poets and hymn writers. On the battle field, in rescue missions, on strange isles, in many unusual places, it has won souls to Jesus, by the simple pleading of the words and where all other efforts have failed "Just as I am, without one plea" has performed seeming miracles.

Miss Elliott, who lived to be 82 years of age, in her younger days had a wavering faith. In the year 1822, Dr. Caesar Malan, of Geneva, visited at the home of her father and one evening, as he sat conversing with the woman, he asked her if she thought herself to be an experimental Christian. Miss Elliott resented the question and the matter was dropped at the time.

But what Malan had said to the young woman disturbed her and her conscience began to work on her soul. Several days later, tormented at the way she had treated this gentle minister, she returned to him and told him that she would like to be a Christian, but that she didn't know how. He talked with her and at last said, "You must give yourself to God, just as you are."

"What! Just as I am? You surely don't mean that God will accept me just as I am!" she replied.

"I mean just that," was his reply.

The matter was dropped at this juncture and the minister returned to his home in Switzerland. Some time later, however, Miss Elliott became editor of the "Yearly Remembrances" and inserted a number of original poems, with her name, among them being "Just as I am, without one plea." The hymn found its way into the scrap book of many devout people, then into religious circles and finally into most hymn books, where it became one of the most famous of English hymns.

At Torquay, an English watering place, Miss Elliott, in feeble health was under the care of a noted physician, who being an earnest Christian, placed a leaflet

ERIN GETS INNING

IRISH PROGRAM AT Y. M. C. A. WELL ATTENDED

The "Irish program" held in the lobby of the Y. M. C. A. building last night was a grand success, with many in attendance in spite of the state basketball tournament. Many people were turned away, as the lobby was over crowded, all space for standing room being taken up.

Everyone attending enjoyed the lovely program, and demanded that more such programs be had in the future.

The following Irish program was presented, under the auspices of William McGilchrist.

Opening Chorus
"A Little Bit of Heaven"

Blackheads

Most stubborn cases of blackheads, pimples and blotches yield to Rowles' Mentho Sulphur. It's the magical combination—sulphur for killing the germs and clearing the skin, menthol for healing the sore and broken tissues. Clears up skin eruptions—even burning eczema—amazingly quick. Leaves the skin healthily white and smooth. Prove it on your own skin. Rowles' Mentho Sulphur is inexpensive and all druggists supply it in jars ready to use. Be sure it's Rowles'.

There must be a Silver Lining

Here you have the always-welcome combination of a fox-trot and a waltz on the same record. Snappy vocal refrains tell you what they're all about. The music itself has that smoothness, spiced with tricky rhythms, that has made these two dance organizations become national favorites. There are four other very interesting records on this week's release. Come in and hear them all—soon!

BORAH PLANS LONE HAND FUND RAISING

Senator Proposes To Gather $160,000 By Popular Contribution

WASHINGTON, Mar. 15—(AP) Calling upon republicans over the country to "repudiate" the $160,000 contribution of Harry F. Sinclair, oil operator and lessee of Teasdale, Idaho, to the republican campaign fund of 1920, the republican Borah of Idaho, set out tonight in a lone hand endeavor to raise the funds to pay off Sinclair.

The Idahoan announced his course after submitting a request several days ago to the republican national committee to collect the money and return it to Sinclair. He said tonight he was going ahead independently "because the committee has not acted."

In lieu of his earlier appeal to the party leaders, including Chairman William M. Butler of the national committee to wipe out the Sinclair contribution, the independent action of Borah was not regarded tonight as without political significance.

However he did not make any attack on the present party head in a formal statement which he issued outlining his program.

"After consulting with friends today," his statement read, "I believe this money. I have already received some contribution voluntarily and offers of more."

"It does not seem to me that it is a matter about which we can delay action. To hesitate is almost as bad as not to act at all. Not over a dozen men perhaps knew of this transaction until recently, but it is now known and it is up to the party to repudiate the whole business and do so without delay."

"I shall appeal therefore to republicans over the country to come forward and lift this obligation of shame. The money will be deposited in the Riggs National bank at Washington, D. C., as fast as received."

Borah first acted after Will Hays, former chairman of the republican national committee, had testified to the senate committee investigating the illegal Teasdale naval oil reserve lease to Sinclair, that he had accepted a total of $260,000 to help meet a deficit in the 1920 campaign of the party and that only $100,000 of this had been returned to Sinclair.

In his unique role of collector of campaign funds the Idaho senator, considered as a possible republican presidential candidate this year despite his assertions to the contrary, will depend entirely on volunteer contributions.

He revealed today that in response to his proposal to the national committee to pay off the Sinclair contribution, promises and contributions of more than $5000 had been sent to him.
