

Cleghorn Outpoints Wesley Hobbs in Fast Ring Battle at Armory

VICTORY DECISIVE BUT HARD BATTLE

It was a great fight. And a fight which kept the fans shouting throughout.

Wesley Hobbs of Seattle was on the receiving end of most everything in his slugging match with Walter Cleghorn of Seattle, in the local armory last night, which resulted in a referee's decision for the Eskimo Indian. It was a real battle from start to finish, the crowd being on edge during the entire fight. The battling Indian, though considerably shorter than the Portland fighter, got the jump on Hobbs at the start and chased his opponent around the ring in every round.

The first round went to Cleghorn, the third to Hobbs. In the second it looked as though Hobbs was beginning to open up and take the Eskimo for a real fight, although the Indian did not weaken and the round was even. The fourth started and Hobbs came to the front again, using his left to good advantage, and it looked as though the fight was turning for the Portland boy. The fourth was even. Cleghorn was cut above the left eye in this round.

The fifth opened and the Indian came back stronger than ever, a determined look on his face, watching Hobbs' left at all times and waiting for every opening to land a hard blow. He found many and gave the Portlander several blows that hurt the battling blonde. Hobbs received many head rights and lefts to the head and body, while the Indian was continually dodging his furious lefts. The fifth went to Cleghorn.

The next round opened, and Hobbs rushed from his corner only to take a good sock to the jaw. They clinched several times, with the Eskimo continually landing shorts to the Portland boy's head, fighting from start to finish. During this round Hobbs began to show signs of weakening and groggy, with the Eskimo landing several good ones and still dodging the famous left hooks. Hobbs did find a few openings to land his left hook, but the Indian took them as though they were meant for him. Cleghorn's round.

The seventh finds Hobbs rushing in again, and they clinch, with the Indian shooting short rights and lefts to his opponent's head in rapid succession, making him snort at every blow. Hobbs landed a left to the Indian's body which stung a bit, but the Seattle fighter came back with several good blows. Hobbs also landed a few good uppercuts to the Indian's jaw which didn't do him any good and the round went to Cleghorn.

The next round, the eighth, looked like the finishing round of the fight. Hobbs again as in the other rounds, rushed from his corner and they clinched again. They came out and Cleghorn was blessed with another cut over his left eye which spurted blood over his face and smeared it all over the Portlander's body.

Hobbs received a beautiful left to the head which made him see stars up in the heavens in spite of the rain. Hobbs returned with a left to the Indian's body, a blow that could be heard all over the armory. He again planted a left hook on the Eskimo's head, but the little fellow never showed any signs of weakening and smashed the big boy with a right hook to the jaw which put him on the mat for nine counts.

Hobbs got up, but was groggy and continually hanging on, getting into clinches with the Indian still handing out his short jabs to the head and body as in every clinch before. Again the round went to Cleghorn.

The ninth round was a furious battle, the Indian looking for any opening to let loose a blow to score a knock out, but Hobbs managed to keep clear. Hobbs let loose with a powerful left to the Indian's head, hitting him square under the jaw, lifting him off his feet several inches, but the game little fighter came back as strong as ever, slashing rights and lefts at will. By this time Hobbs appeared to be tired and groggy, hanging on considerably. Again the Seattle fighter smacked the Portlander with a terrific right to the jaw which put him down for a count of one, and the round ends in favor of the Eskimo.

The last round had the entire crowd on edge. Hobbs again rushing out of his corner only to be received by a nice blow to the head. The Indian was determined to score a kayo in this round, but the Portland fighter kept himself pretty well on the lookout for the stinging rights he had so often received in the former rounds. He did receive a terrible punishment, with the Indian still showing no sign of weakness or grogginess, fighting as clever and accurate as in the first round. Hobbs did manage to find an opening in the last round to land a hard left to the Indian's jaw, but he took it as farce, and the tenth round went to Cleghorn.

So here we have the first two going to Cleghorn, the third to Hobbs, the fourth even and the rest to Cleghorn by far.

Every fight fan present declared that this was the best fight he had ever witnessed in this city, and Matchmaker Plant received many congratulations for the promotion of such a battle. The crowd went home well pleased and receiving their money's worth.

Now as to the preliminaries. In the curtain raiser Harry Savage of Albany won by a decision over the battling little Salem newsboy, Young Ambray. This was a good fight from start to finish, a real slugging match. The first round was even and the other went to the winner.

Young Ensley and Young Firpo next appeared upon the scene in a battle which proved to be a farce

PROTEST POWER DEVELOPMENTS

C. A. Lookwood, on behalf of the Douglas County Sportsmen and Game Protective association, Wednesday filed with the state engineer here a protest against granting water permits involving six proposed power developments on Oregon rivers and lakes without first calling a hearing.

The protest filed by the Douglas County Sportsmen and Game Protective association, is similar to protests entered by numerous other game protective organizations in southern Oregon.

Mr. Lookwood requested that the Douglas county association be furnished with reports of all applications for water power development on Oregon streams.

Floyd Wilderman of west Salem was an easy target for the battling Harry Burtoner of Eugene, who won by a knock out in the third round. Both these men were six footers and doubled up in knots on several occasions.

Pee-wee Greene of Portland won over Cl Flook of Mill City in the first part of the first round in what the referee declared to be a technical knockout, because Flook hit the canvas without being knocked down. There are several arguments about this decision, but it ended in a technical kayo for the Portlander. They will again be matched in the preliminaries in the Bayes vs. Gordon battle.

Ray Jacobs of Eugene fought to a draw with Pete Willett of Salem in a bloody encounter. Both fighters were groggy at the finish, and appeared very tired, each receiving considerable punishment.
