WILLAMETTE DEBATE TEAM ON WAY SOUTH

Witty and Redding To Compete In Oratorical Contest At Los Angeles

Robert Witty and Charles Redding, Willamette university debaters, left for Los Angeles early yesterday morning where they will represent the university at the annual meeting of the Pacific forensic league which is being held there this year. They expect to return to the campus about April 5. While in the south the two debaters plan to meet the men's debate team of the University of Southern California. Witty will compete in the oratorical contest at this meeting and Redding will enter the extemporaneous contest. Both men are good orators and will make a strong bid for honors in these competitions.

Immediately after their return to the campus they will prepare for their debate with Southwestern University of California, which will be held at the Willamette chapel beginning at 8 o'clock on the evening of April 6. This will be the biggest debate of the season as the southern institution is a contest in which they will uphold the affirmative side of the question, "Resolved, that the United States should cease to protect by armed force capital invested abroad except after a formal declaration of war." This will be a unique debate inasmuch as they will use the Oregon style in which both the affirmative and negative will cross examine the other side respectively. This debate will be held in the Willamette chapel.

The last debate of the season will take place April 14 at the local university where the Willamette freshmen debate team will meet the Oregon State college meet Oregon state college freshmen debaters. This will be a decision debate and the public is invited to attend.

On April 13, Willamette university will participate in the state peace oratorical contest which will be held in Albany this year. Willamette will also at the same contest be represented by an extemporaneous speaker. The contest will begin at 2 o'clock.

Something new and unique will be staged in the Willamette gymnasium by the local debate team known as a forensic festival. This will be held May 11, and the purpose of it is to raise funds for the debaters which will represent the Willamette university in a world debate tour next year. An excellent program is being arranged.

HERBERT HOOVER'S SEVEN U. S. BUSINESS PILGRIMAGES

(This is the third installment of an article which will appear in the April issue of Magazine of Business, in which Robert R. Updegraff tells of the little known "middle 15 years" of Herbert Hoover's life.)

The Australian and British owners realized that Australian gold mining and metallurgical practice had shown no advancement since the days of Bendigo and Ballarat. Meantime, American engineering practice had improved by leaps and bounds over the 40 years since the older Australian mining camps had ceased to grow.

The primary problem of mining was complicated by the fact that these mines were in the midst of the great Australian desert; there was no water supply except the shallow salt-water wells. It was further complicated by the fact that many of the ores were of most refractory type and new metallurgical methods needed to be devised.

Hoover's first step was to send for more American engineers. There appeared on this horizon throughout the mining world in later years—Pritchett, Loring, Pomeroy, Mitchell, Wilson, Gold-Pome, Grant (now treasurer of the United States Mint), Shipstead, Williams, and a score of others. His job was to get production and to pay dividends; to get production from mines means winding engines, boilers, condensing plants, dynamos, cyanide plants, air-drills, and ten thousand articles that make up the complex equipment required for modern mines. America was the sole source of much of this type of machinery and supplies. And so there started a stream of orders for manufacturers of this type that could not be built in Australia back to the United States. The name-plates of American manufacturers from Ohio, Indiana, Wisconsin, and New York are peppered over these great mills, cyanide plants, air-drills, and ten thousand articles that make up the complex equipment required for modern mines. America was the sole source of much of this type of machinery and supplies. And so there started a stream of orders for manufacturers of this type that could not be built in Australia back to the United States. The name-plates of American manufacturers from Ohio, Indiana, Wisconsin, and New York are peppered over these great mills, cyanide plants, air-drills, and ten thousand articles that make up the complex equipment required for modern mines.

Every gallon had to be saved. But in the recovery of ore a large volume of water is required to separate the particles of metals. The amount of ore that could be ground was limited by the amount of water. But the amount of water that could be used in which the ores are reduced. To run this out into great ponds to settle only meant that large amounts of water were lost by slow settling in the hot climate. Moreover, in some parts of the stream recovery, the metals themselves are dissolved in chemical solutions; then these solutions must be recovered from mud, not only to use them again, but more importantly because the solution itself contained the metal. So the American engineers were up against the problem of water recovery from their ores.

Frank West, one of the American engineers on Mr. Hoover's staff, thought of the idea of using the filter press which had been developed in American sugar mills for separating sugar pulp from the sugar solutions. Forthwith they ordered a couple to try it out. They redesigned the press, raising its capacity from a ton a day to 20 to 30 tons a day, and adapting it to the job they were at work on. The result has been the building up of a large export, and a large domestic use in the United States, of filter presses in connection with the cyanide processes for gold recovery.
