Limousines rolled up to the door of the hotel and the glighting passengers eyed Hastie curiously and passed on. A few stopped to talk to him, usually saying, "Out of work? That's too bad," and then departed.

"I ask no favor-all I want is a job," he explained. And though he stood there all day, no job was offered.

Were you ever out of a job, with only a dollar in your pocket and a family on your hands? There are more than a few of that kind of jobless persons in Portland now.

Think it over. It is better to find a job for a jobless human being than to conquer a city.

That last statement of the Portland Journal is a strong one-

But who says it is not justified?

When will society be so organized that any willing worker may be able to find employment?

Under our present systems of organized society, with its many faults respecting this prime thing for human happiness, it is a far cry to such a condition; and growing no better. Growing worse, with the greater use of machinery, and the greater shifting owing to new inventions.

Where is the leadership that will point the way to a time when there shall be no cases like the one of the man at the entrance of the Waldorf-Astoria?

We must have such leadership to approximate the ap-
