Stores Prepared to Aid Diet Experts' Program

Week-end shopping does present a problem, what with so many stores from which to buy and so many tempting things in such variety. Take, for instance, vegetables, with which every household is primarily concerned, willingly or otherwise.

Course, there are families that don't eat as many of these green products as the food experts say they should, but perhaps that's because they don't realize just what a variety is procurable right downtown here. And especially in the springtime should plenty of green food be eaten, say these food cranks.

Sure, it's hard to call rising rivers, continual rain and floods spring, but the calendar says it is. So, to help the cause along, here's some of the things the shopper will find to go in her grocery plans for the week-end, or all next week, and how it looks, too.

Celery, next to that shredded cereal, the greatest "broom of the stomach," looks good again this week, though, as noticeable for some time, it is the heart that appears the most appetizing.

Did you ever try some nice crisp stalks cut fine, mixed with some lettuce, shrimp and mayonnaise? It's a good wholesome salad. But that's only one of dozens of ways to use celery.

Lettuce, too, is going to present itself in excellent shape for the week-end buyer and will be utilized in plenty of salads and sandwiches, no doubt.

You can buy a head of lettuce for as little as five cents, though it'll be a little head, too. The fancy ones cost somewhere around 15 cents each or two for a quarter, though there seem to be almost as many prices as stores, and ditto for celery.

Used to be only little boys and girls ate carrots, turnips, and even parsnips raw. Nowadays, it's quite the thing in well regulated families for at least one raw dish (of vegetables) to appear on the table this week-end will be pretty small, but good eating nevertheless, if what the market writer saw yesterday is any indication. The smaller chokes are cheaper, as sounds reasonable.

once a day, or oftener. What progress we make! Electric stoves and dietary experts will soon reduce cooking or want of it to "where there will no longer be any Norahs."

But to return to the carrots, et cetera. Both the old and new carrot crops are on hand now, and both good, even though the more expensive ones do look "sickly" along side their mature brethren.

The turnips and parsnips are plentiful and good, also.

Rutabagas and beets are other root vegetables that are still making a bid for the housewife's favor. The former look solid and cookable enough, but here and there are seen beets that few cooks would consider "bothering with." Some look old, and others are pretty small.

Broccoli continues to make an excellent appearance in the vegetable bins, and more, it has the goods behind the locks. Few people who like broccoli—or cauliflower—need go without it at the low price of two pounds for 15 cents. Or you can buy it by the piece just as reasonable.

California cabbage continues to go over the counter at five cents per pound, and is as good as any cook would expect. In fact, it's a new crop. Spokane is also supplying some cabbage, although the Wilmingsstadt variety from the south is rated the best right now.

Spinach and the popular curly leaf green, and mustards also, supply a field from which green-eaters may pick to their liking. Prices, too, are reasonable enough, as you'll notice.

Peas, peppers and parsley may all be obtained right downtown. The discriminating buyer will see that she carries home the best of the fresh green peas, while others may get some not so good, yet still good enough to make a real vegetable for the meal. Like everything else, peas get dummy looking as they go without buyers for too long a period.

Peppers that you buy now will probably not be as nice as those the merchants offered awhile back, but if you use them right away, you'll hardly notice the difference. To be sure, you may do your shopping at one of the stores where some of the better keeping stock is still on hand.

Parsley doesn't seem to have an over abundant market, but maybe that is because mother grows a little patch by the side of the house. But it is a pretty trimming and gives soup a good flavor, just as hints.

New potatoes are seen in more plentiful number now and incidentally, at a little lower price, two pounds for 25 cents—and up and down, depending upon where you buy, not to mention other price-determining incidentals.

Asparagus is still new enough, also, to bit the consumer at a pretty fair clip. Two pounds for 25 cents is probably about the best rate that you'll get. It's all good, though it's custom for the fancy grades to look the best. Creamed asparagus and toast! Yum, yum.

color, red, yellow or green looks just as much out of place at church.

No matter how beautiful is a hat, if it does not harmonize with the rest of the costume, it has failed to fulfill its function. When a woman is clever enough to design her own hats or the budget allows several hats for each season of the year, the problem is not a difficult one to solve; but when only one new hat may be had in two or three years, much more careful thought is required. The hat selected should not be a picture hat because this would not look well on the street, nor should it be a strictly tailored type because this mannish effect would be too severe to wear with a costume on many dressy occasions. Neither should it be a conspicuous style or color because both the owner and her friends would soon tire of it.

The hat for general wear should be durable, not only in material but in style so that it may be worn for more than one season without appearing shabby. To be durable in style means that it must be conservative in every way, so that it will harmonize with every occasion and costume worn. The most economical woman will buy the best material, take the best care of it, and, if possible, make it herself. To be safe it is best to have the hat and suit or dress of the same color. To give variety the hat may be darker or lighter in color and may be of different material. The design carried out in the dress may be repeated in the hat. Sport hats are often made of the same material as the dress. Some part of the costume should always be included in the hat in order to make it a part of the whole design. This may be done in color, line or material.

As a test to guide in hat selection, the home economics extension specialists suggest answering the following questions: Is it fitted to the purpose—in line, texture and color? Does it harmonize with the garments with which it is to be worn?

HATS FOR EASTER SHOULD SUIT OWNER

Selection of a suitable "Easter Bonnet" from among the many hats displayed this spring will be much easier for the average woman if she first makes a study of her own general proportions, her wardrobe, and the occasion on which the hat is to be worn.

A carefully designed hat must be suited to the figure, say home economics specialists. It is always best in selecting a hat to choose it before a full length mirror so that the entire figure may be taken into consideration. The hat may not be in good proportion to the shoulders, hips, or posture. The woman of average slender weight does not have the problems which confront her tall slender sister or her short stout one. No matter how much beauty a hat may possess as a hat, a dressy hat of laces, brocade, and feathers will never look well if worn on the street. A sport hat of brilliant

That Tired Feeling

Is it caused by overwork—either mental or physical—or is it due to a condition of the system known as "over-acidity"?

Scientists claim the latter cause to be largely responsible for lack of endurance, and emphasize the vital importance of maintaining the "Chemical Balance"—that margin by which alkali exceeds acid in the blood.

This natural tonic is Alkaline in action—neutralizes the acid and supplies mineral elements which are absolutely essential to health.
