

INCOME TAX LEVY MOVE CONTINUES

Continues Meeting in Portland Adopts General Idea in Resolution

PORTLAND, April 20.—(AP)—Adoption of a report favoring the principle of an income tax as one of the means of raising state revenue, by the sub-committee on tax equalization, redistribution and indirect taxation, climaxed the sessions here today of the various sub-committees of the property tax relief commission, created under authority of the last legislature to devise methods of reducing taxes and more equitably adjusting the tax burden.

The report carried with it the endorsement of no particular form of income tax. In fact, members of the special sub-committee which prepared the report and submitted it to the main sub-committee admitted that they were hopelessly divided at the present time on the kind of an income tax that should be enacted.

The special sub-committee expressed the conviction that with further study and discussion of the question, their views might be harmonized into an income tax measure, free from the weaknesses of previous measures, which "we hope may meet with the approval of the legislature."

The committee recommended, however, that this study be postponed until after the fate of the three proposed income tax measures is determined at the November election.

In this form the report won the favor of the main sub-committee and was adopted by a vote of five to one. It will be presented to the general commission session tomorrow, at which time it is expected that opponents of the income tax idea may make a stand against it.

The report, which was characterized by A. A. Smith, chairman of the main sub-committee, as "the most constructive and definite recommendation yet to come of our studies of the taxation question," was submitted on behalf of the special sub-committee by C. E. Ingalls of Corvallis. Other members were: E. E. Brodie of Oregon City and A. R. Shumway of Milton.

The one dissenting vote was cast by L. B. Smith, secretary and counsel for the Greater Oregon association, who also took the floor against its adoption. Smith stated that the reasons voiced by the committee for not preparing a specific measure until after the November election applied with equal force to their proposal to approve the principle of an income tax. Affirmative action by the committee, he predicted, would be seized upon by the friends of measures now pending and urged in their behalf.

PLAN SCHOLARSHIP

SBS STUDENTS WILL SUPPORT ARMENIAN STUDENT

Salem high school students will raise one $200 scholarship to keep one Armenian student in school for a year, the student council decided Friday.

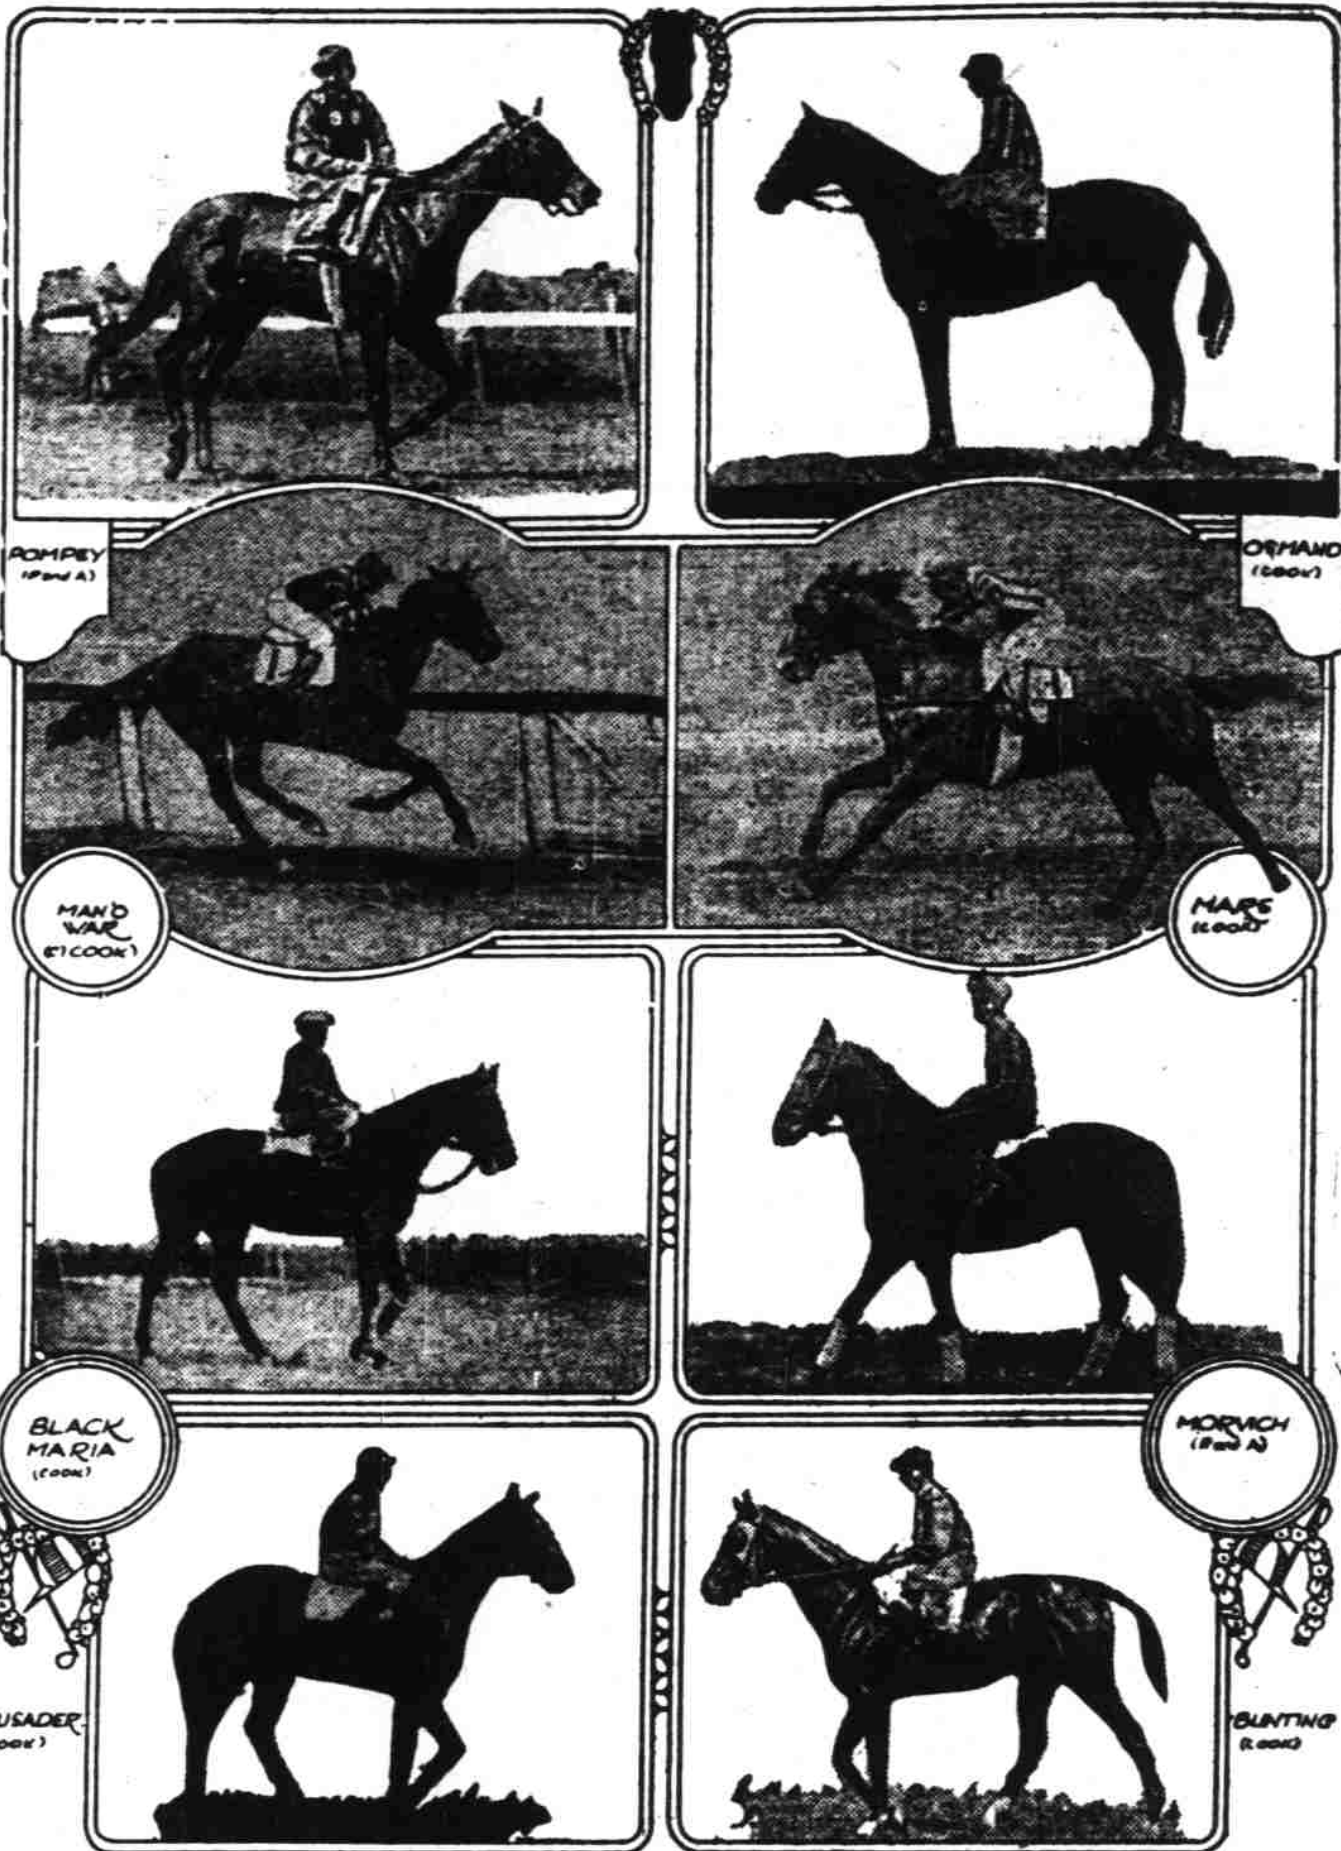

Friday morning, J. J. Handsaker, regional director of the Near East Relief with headquarters in Portland, addressed an assembly of high school students. So sharply did he depict the existing conditions and need for assistance in the Near East, the student council voted to assume the responsibility of keeping one boy or girl in school a year.

An effort will be made to raise the scholarship fund before school closes for the year and to that end a committee has been appointed to devise ways and means. Maxine Meyers is in charge.

Mr. Handsaker also appeared before the students at Leslie and Parrish junior high schools and Washington and Grant grade schools.

Eastern Racing Season Opens

Some of the famous and valuable turf stars whose stables have been protected from lightning fire hazard by copper rods.

WITH winter horse racing drawing to a close the curtain rings up on the eastern season with boots and saddles sounding at Bowie, Maryland. The Metropolitan season will be ushered in by the United Hunt and Racing Association at Aqueduct, New York, on April 19th. Other race tracks in the east and west follow closely these openings.

Some of the fastest horses that ever sported silks on the American turf will face the barrier in the more important stakes. Above are pictured some of the turf kings and queens who will be campaigned during the season. Crusader, champion of 1926-27 and Black Maria, turf queen for the past two years, will make their first start of the season at Jamaica. Some of the other thoroughbreds pictured have been retired to the stud. They won many of the more important stakes during their spectacular careers.

Millions of dollars are invested by the leading sportsmen and sportswomen of this country in their breeding farms and racing stables. During recent years some of these owners have suffered heavy losses when lightning struck their barns killing valuable horses. In the last few months, these owners have been having copper lightning rods installed on all their barns. Practically every important breeding farm and most of the stables at the principal race courses will soon be protected from this hazard by copper lightning rods. These rods effectively protect the barns on which they are installed and the valuable runners in which they are housed. All the famous horses in this picture are now protected from lightning by copper rods.

FLOOD RELIEF BILL GETS SIDETRACKED

Negotiations Going on With President Coolidge for Present

WASHINGTON, April 20.—(AP)—The unusual procedure of isolation in an effort to revise its side tracking a major piece of legislation to meet the objections of President Coolidge was employed in the house today with the temporary suspension of consideration of the senate-Jones flood control bill.

This paved the way for continuing of conferences between house republican leaders who visited the White House to ascertain if the tentative agreement reached with the opposing camp would meet with presidential approval.

Seven Die When Blasts Wreck and Burn Plant

DENVER, Colo., April 20.—(AP)—At least seven persons were burned to death and 19 were injured, several probably fatally, when three terrific explosions rocked the Alexander Industries plant at Englewood, a suburb and set fire to the properties today.

None of the 26 men and women who were working in the paint shop of the plant, located a short distance in the rear of the main structure, escaped uninjured. The company engages in a number of enterprises including the manufacture of airplanes and the fire spread rapidly from the paint shop where highly inflammable supplies used in the "dipping" of airplane wings were stored.

Flames enveloped the building after the first blast. Persons, their clothing in flames, staggered from the burning structure while rescuers, rushed in and emerged with the seared bodies of others among the dead or critically injured.

The known dead are Effie Harkins and Ella Taylor, employees. Miss Gertrude C. Jarrett, Ross Owen Scott and Carl B. Moseley. In quick succession the two blasts followed the first explosion, and flames shot fifty feet out of the building. Almost all of the clothing of the victims were burned off. Several were in critical condition at the Denver general hospital. A temporary first aid station was established and here the nude and seared bodies of victims were swathed in hastily improvised bandages.

Reports that two or more women perished when they were trapped in the buildings could not be verified tonight, and they remained unaccounted for.

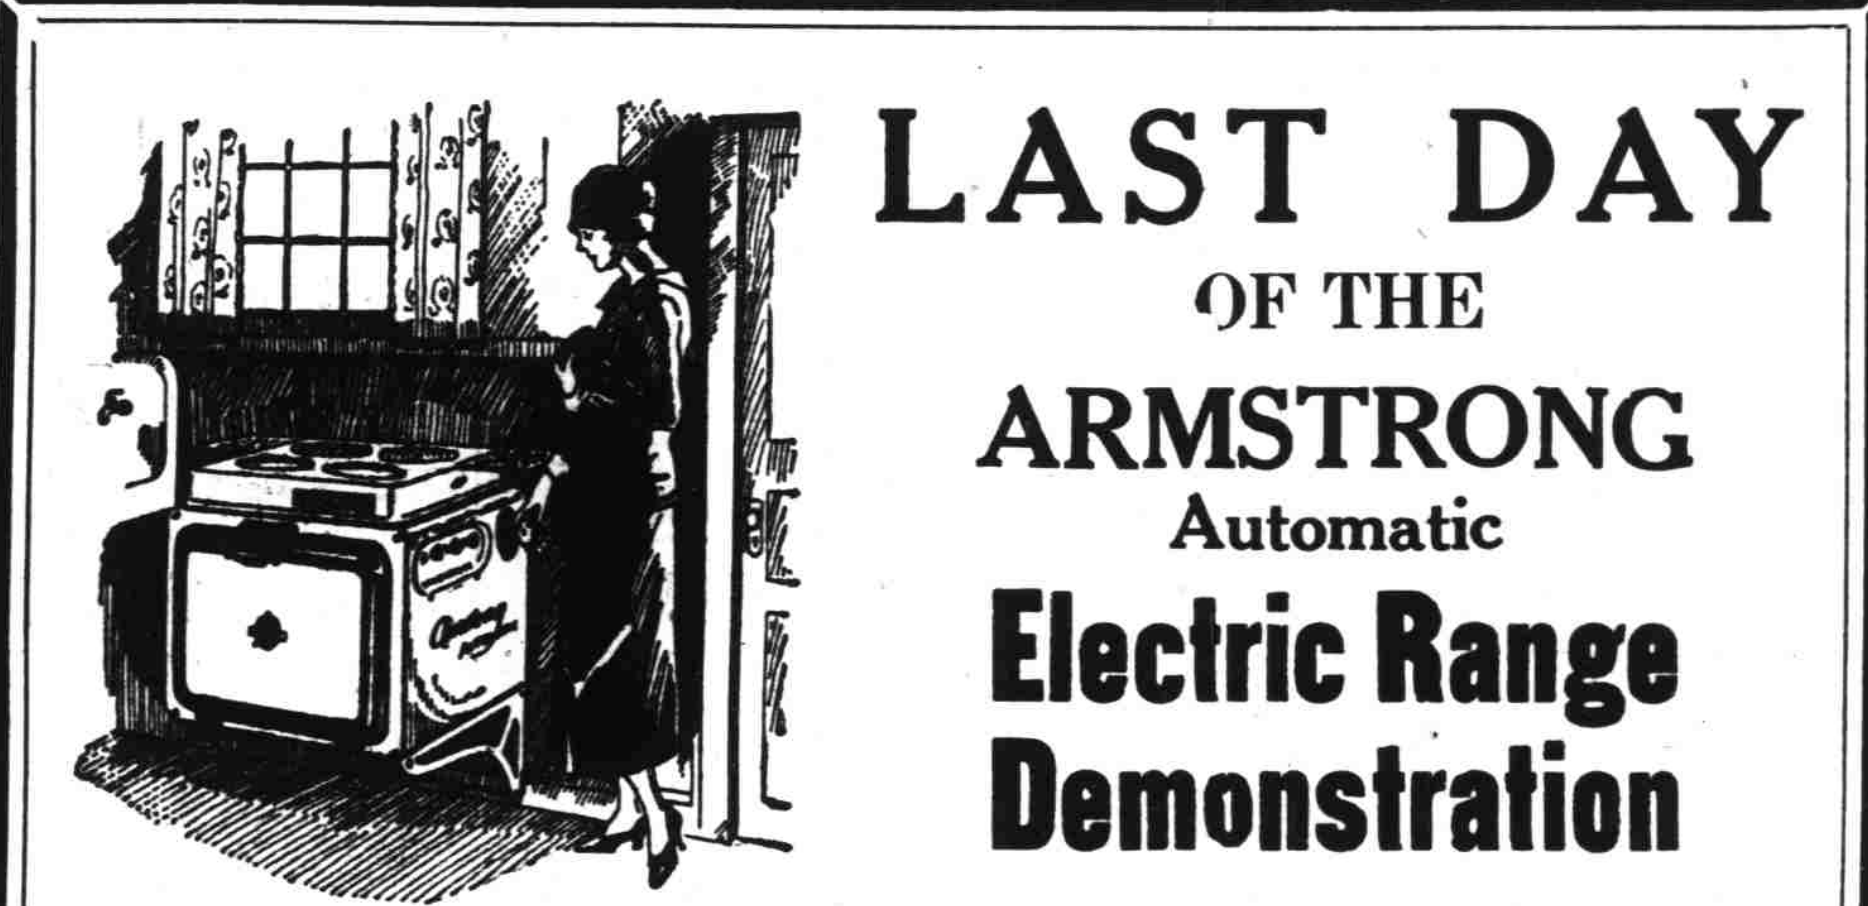

Authorities were unable to assign the official reason for the blast but Richard Trenari, 21, an employe who was in the building when the disaster occurred, said he believed it was caused by a short circuited electric fan which dropped into an open pan of silver nitrate.

Trenari, who escaped with minor bruises, declared the entrapped victims who did not happen to be near a door, had no avenue of escape. A large amount of highly explosive airplane paint was stored in the building.

"The flames spread rapidly and soon the whole west wing was in flames," he said. "It was a terrible inferno. Screams of trapped women and men employes inside could be heard for blocks."

Trenari feared that the bodies of several women workers would be found in the ruins.

That Tired Feeling

Is it caused by overwork—either mental or physical—or is it due to a condition of the system known as "over-acidity"?

Scientists claim the latter cause to be largely responsible for lack of endurance, and emphasize the vital importance of maintaining the "Chemical Balance"—that margin by which alkali exceeds acid in the blood.

This natural tonic is Alkaline in action—neutralizes the acid and supplies mineral elements which are absolutely essential to health.
