

STUDENTS EMBARK ON APPRENTICESHIP

Commercial Dept. Seniors at SHS to Spend Half Day in Offices

Monday morning saw the opening of the annual apprenticeship work of seniors in the commercial department of the Salem high school, announces Merritt Davis, head of the department.

Which means that, continuing until the end of the school year, commercial seniors will spend half of each day working in a number of the local business offices and the other half in the classroom.

It has become a custom of the department to send forth its seniors that they might gain some actual experience before graduation days arrive and they are thrown entirely upon their own resources in the business world.

The young stenographers and bookkeepers work the half day without monetary stimulus. No charge is made for their services; the experience gained being accounted sufficient reward, says Mr. Davis.

The arrangement, which has been approved by the leading business and professional men of the city, has a two-fold purpose: to assist the business men in choosing an office assistant, and to provide practical experience for the student. It is the practice of a number of local firms to add one or more of the graduating students to their staffs each spring, among which business houses are the United States National bank, Ladd & Bush bank, Patton's book store and the Morris Optical company.

Any Salem business man who would like to have a part time stenographer, bookkeeper or salesperson, either in the forenoon or afternoon, should get in touch with Mr. Davis at the high school and arrangement will be made for him to call and select one of the senior apprentices.

Mr. Davis frequently hears expressions of commendation for his plan, as this time of year is opportunity for the students to give considerable assistance to their temporary employers.

There will be approximately 65 graduates in the commercial courses this year, just twice as many students as were enrolled in the entire department when Mr. Davis took charge 17 years ago, he remarked. Now 45 per cent of the high school enrollment is taking courses in the commercial department and the course has grown so that it keeps nine teachers (one more than last year) but full time to cover the work.

The local department is rated by Mr. Walker, president of Behrke-Walker business college of Portland as the strongest high school department in the northwest. Another indication of the thoroughness of instruction may be seen in the fact that the commercial department of Oregon state college rates the work done here as equal to junior college work.

The course is so complete, that unless students wish to specialize in a particular branch of commerce they go into the business ranks right from high school. That the high school commercial graduates are successful is attested in a recent list of former students compiled by Mr. Davis and his assistants. It is but a partial list, showing what students who have graduated within the last 10 years are doing. With but three exceptions the students on the partial list stepped into jobs with no preparation beyond the local courses.

The list, to which Mr. Davis points with pride, contains the following:

MANEUVERS SUCCESSFUL

Fleet of Almost 100 Ships Eludes "Enemy" For 10 Days

HONOLULU, April 30.—(AP).—Nearly 100 ships of the United States battle fleet maneuvered at sea for 10 days and, so far as is known, were never sighted by the "enemy" force that was sent out to locate them. This was the assertion made here by Admiral Louis R. Desteiguer, commander in chief of the battle fleet which terminated the first phase of its war game between the mainland and Hawaii.

"There were two occasions at night when we figured we were very close to the 'enemy' ships," the admiral said. "There was the possibility then of the enemy going through our formation but we did not see the opposing force and there was no battle activity or other contest."

The submarines that accompanied the battle fleet to Hawaii functioned well, Admiral Desteiguer said.

That Tired Feeling

Is it caused by overwork—either mental or physical—or is it due to a condition of the system known as "over-acidity"?

Scientists claim the latter cause to be largely responsible for lack of endurance, and emphasize the vital importance of maintaining the "Chemical Balance"—that margin by which alkali exceeds acid in the blood.

This natural tonic is Alkaline in action—neutralizes the acid and supplies mineral elements which are absolutely essential to health.
