IT IS BIG NEWS

The news of the opening in Salem in time for next summer's harvesting of the mint crop of a peppermint oil refinery, fully equipped for all the lines of work of such an institution, and all under one roof, is big news. It is big news as it relates to peppermint oil only, for this district is bound to become the big peppermint oil center of this country.

But it is bigger news on account of its relationship to the other essential oil plants, of which there are about 60 that may be grown here on a commercial scale; will be, in good time.

The Salem district has made a good start. There are experiments in this field going on all the time.

But there should be greater attention paid to this great field; to the whole drug garden field.

The Oregon Agricultural college ought to have an experimental drug garden constantly engaged on experiments, working with native drug plants and the drug plants of other countries that might be developed here commercially.

There is a future in this field for Oregon big almost beyond the range of imagination.

An experimental drug garden outfit at the college would not cost much to start and equip; probably not more than $2000. And it would not be expensive to maintain. It would pay its cost in time, many, many times over.

OREGON AS "KEY" STATE

An Associated Press dispatch from Washington that should interest every resident of this state reads as follows:

"On conclusion of the fact-finding investigation in the Great Lakes states, the federal forest taxation inquiry conducted under terms of the Clarke-McNary law will be opened in the Pacific coast region, with Oregon as the key state."

"Announcement of the shift has been made by Fred Rogers Fairchild, professor of political economy at Yale and director of the inquiry."

"It is the ultimate purpose of the investigation to recommend a system of forest taxation which, while affording equitable revenue, will encourage and protect forestry, particularly as practiced by the individual farmer."

This is gratifying news.

For if the forest resources of Oregon are to be maintained indefinitely, there must be a policy of conservation provided, in order that men with suitable land for growing trees may be encouraged to plant and preserve them.

This is true of the whole country.

But it has special application and appeal in Oregon, where our forest resources are back of our greatest manufacturing industries. These may be preserved, and they may be vastly increased, especially in the higher grades of manufacture, like furniture and all the more expensive things made of wood.

And like paper and paper converting plants, which may be provided in multiplied volume of output and wage rolls.

With conservation; with the proper systems of taxation, these may go on indefinitely. Trees may grow and ripen and be harvested, like other crops; and other trees may take their places. It is a far seeing vision of statesmanship that is providing the present fact-finding investigation.

It seems apparent now that many of the prune orchards of this district will be replaced with other crops. With dairying, sheep and goat breeding, the poultry industry, walnuts and filberts, etc., etc. And perhaps with a change in some cases to French prunes of the varieties that yield large sizes. Any way, it is good to know that this is the land of diversity. No farmer is obliged to carry all his eggs in one basket. This is potentially the greatest farming district in the world. Let no one be discouraged over the future of Salem and this district. Though it is highly proper to sympathize with the prune growers who are due for another year of discouragement. And still more highly proper to aid them in every way possible. That will count more for them and the community than mere idle sympathy.

A dispatch from Washington says: While production will depend largely on weather conditions, the department of agriculture finds "every indication" that the record crop of 342,000,000 quarts of strawberries last season may be exceeded this year.

OVER BREMEN CREW

Point Where Flyers Go,
Cheering Loudly

NEW YORK, May 1.—(AP)—This was officially labelled a day of rest on the schedule of the Bremen flyers, but it was no sort of rest over they had in Germany or Ireland.

To enable Baron Von Huenefeld, Captain Koehl and Major Fitzmaurice to recuperate from the rigors of the official welcome yesterday, the daylight program today included no more than a visit to a newspaper office, a brief ceremony at the sub-treasury and calls on the German and British consulates.

This might have been restful enough if New Yorkers had seen their fill of the flyers yesterday, but it turned out that they were just as tired for a glimpse today, and still had the voice to indulge in cheering.

When the party left the Ritz Carlton hotel in the morning they found some 5,000 persons massed in the streets. The progress to Park Row was between sidewalks crowded with other cheering thousands and scores of police were needed to conduct them through jostling throngs jammed about the World Building.

The flyers were then driven to the corner of Broad and Wall streets, where they laid wreaths on the base of the statue of George Washington on the sub-treasury steps.

It was just after noon when they arrived in Wall street and clerks elbowed with financiers to take a look at them. There were addresses and invocations, but they were drowned out in the din of cheering.

And there in the heart of the financial district the paper snowstorm that drifted Broadway and Fifth avenue with 1500 tons of home made confetti yesterday, broke out again. Ticker tape swirled down in long streamers from high windows and watchers far above the street tossed any paper they would find into the street.

The visits to the consulates were brief, and both were made only through crowds that seemed to know no limit to enthusiasm.

Once back in their hotel the flyers sought what rest there was in the imperfect seclusion of their suite in preparation for the dinner tendered them tonight by the city.

The only one of the flyers to escape from crowds for a spell today was Captain Koehl, who early slipped out to Curtis field and spend three quarters of an hour in the air in the Junkers F-13, sister ship of the transatlantic plane Bremen.

The wives of Captain Koehl and Major Fitzmaurice decided to attend a theatre tonight rather than attend the banquet.

Bits For Breakfast

Lots of talk—

About a million phone conversations in Oregon every 24 hours. About as many as we have men, women and children.

It will be a pity, if the Italian prune industry of this district must be curtailed. This is the prince of prunes. The tart-sweet taste is preferred by the prune epicures the world over.

But it is likely that this district will always grow some prunes; and some prunes of the Italian variety. Though it may be a good while before there are any more large solid plantings of them.

In southern Oregon, some prune growers have been smudging to prevent damage to the prunes from frost. But no one can smudge against the rain. We have heard occasionally of prayer for rain. But no one even thinks of praying for the rain to stop. When it rains like it did lately for days and nights on end, it just rains, and nothing can be done about it.

His supporters in the east are heralding Herbert Hoover as the great prophet of prosperity; the engineer of commerce and business who knows how to organize for the nimble dollar and the full dinner pail. That will make an appeal to this country that will be hard to beat.

In the readjustment of employment, due to new inventions, this country needs a constructive engineer at its head. There are problems in industry and employment that need a directing mind and an organizing head, more than at any former time in the history of the country.

MAJOR J. T. FANCHER
BURIED WITH HONOR

Peace Time Hero Given
Homage of City of Spokane
At Funeral

SPOKANE, May 1.—(AP)—Cut down on the battlefield of peace, Major John T. Fancher went to his soldier's grave today, surrounded by his comrades in arms and the homage of a sorrowing city.

As the cortege of military units and civilians moved out of Spokane, three flags were half masted and three airplanes of Fancher's own squadron drummed overhead in the blue. With this convoy was Fancher's plane which he had once flown to New York.

When the three volleys of the firing squad had crashed out and the soft notes of "Taps," the soldier's farewell, had floated upon the wind, the three airplanes swooped and dropped their tribute of flowers near the grave.

Major Fancher literally gave his life in trying to prevent possible injury to others, it was revealed in the address of Dr. Henry A. Van Winkle, chaplain of the 161st infantry.

The major remarked after he came down from a demonstration flight at the Wenatchee apple blossom festival that there were three bombs left. The clergyman said, and stated, "I'll just say of these so that nobody will be hurt by them." Then the fatal bomb detonated.

FARM BILL UP

WASHINGTON, May 1.—(AP)—The House agreed today to close general debate on the McNary-Haugen farm relief bill after five more hours of discussion, thereby the way for consideration of the measure under procedure permitting amendment.

BANDITS ESCAPE

PORTLAND, Ore., May 1.—(AP)—Shrieking sirens on police cars frightened two burglars looking for the J. Glase Tailor and clothing store early today, and when officers arrived they found a stack of clothing and other articles piled up ready to be taken away.

SMUDGE POTS IN USE

MEDFORD, Ore., May 1.—(AP)—Thousands of smudge pots blazed throughout the orchards of the Rogue river valley in the first general smudging of the season last night, with a low temperature of 35 degrees. According to Frost Expert Floyd Young, there was no commercial damage to orchards that smudged, and but little in those that did not.

THE OLD HOME TOWN

DEBATE COMPLETED
UPON McNARY BILL

Final Consideration of Farm
Relief Measure Set for Thursday

WASHINGTON, May 1.—(AP)—The House wound up general debate on the McNary-Haugen farm relief bill today and deferred until Thursday consideration of the measure under procedure permitting amendments.

For 15 hours—the longest period allotted for the discussion of any bill in recent years—half a hundred or more members attacked and defended the measure and at times touched upon its possible relation to the presidential aspirations of Frank O. Lowden of Illinois and Vice President Dawes.

Considerable time also was devoted to speculation as to whether President Coolidge again would veto the legislation. Supporters argued that with the exception of the equalization fee provision all White House objections had been eliminated but opponents took a different view.

In closing hours of debate Representative Aswell of Louisiana, ranking democrat on the agriculture committee, which reported the bill, served notice that he proposed to offer an amendment to eliminate the fee provisions and that if this should fail he proposed to move to send the measure back to the committee. His challenge was met by the bill's supporters who argued that before the fee could be made effective the proposed federal farm board first would be directed to attempt to control agricultural surpluses by use of the $400,000,000 revolving fund that he provided for loans to cooperative associations.

Half a dozen members insisted that the McNary-Haugen measure offered the only adequate means for farm relief. Chairman Haugen of the agriculture committee expressed confidence that he, as he did last year could muster sufficient votes to pass it by a safe margin.

can tell you how to do it. A fly hook must hit the surface of the water without a splash, as that is the natural way for insects to light upon the water. You must match your wits with those of the fish," he ended.

Bill Briskley, local fisherman was asked to give a short lecture on the art of fishing with a spinner. He declared that he had his best luck fishing with a spinner, even better than fishing with a fly. He declared that each fisherman has his own type of spinner, but that he always used the Shelton No. 6.

His idea of casting a spinner was to cast it straight across the stream and then let the current curve it, allowing the spinner to float just above the bottom of the stream, and usually one will hook them when the spinner is drifted below again. He gave several of his experiences fishing with spinners and also trolling with a fly, making his best fly catches in this manner.

He declared that a fisherman using spinners should use about 150 to 300 feet of line, made out to the head of the current and then let the line go out. This way one can get into places where he otherwise could never be able to cast his hook.

In using bait on his hook, Briskley recommended fresh chub meat, with the skin still on. The tough skin keeps the bait on the hook. He said that there were a lot of little stunts in fishing that one could learn only through experience and practice, which could never be made clear through words.

Mr. Clifford, state game warden, gave an interesting talk on the stream of the Willamette and Clackamas rivers against "fish

Talent Contests Asset
In Country Cooperation

That the contest concert series which are being held in the Elsinore theater each Friday night will bring the people of the rural districts closer to those in the city was brought out by Dr. P. O. Riley of Hubbard, president of the Marion county Federation of Community clubs, in his speech before the members of the Kiwanis club at their weekly luncheon yesterday noon. He brought out the fact that it put Salem in the light of a big brother to the small communities in the vicinity, willing to cooperate with them.

This he declared would develop an unselfish attitude between the various communities, and larger cities.

"You men do not build for others," he said. "You build for yourself. You build a bridge for those of tomorrow to make this country the best there is. Let us produce from ourselves that spirit of giving," he said.

JAPS WORKING WAY INTO CHINA, REPORT

Resentment Expressed by Nationalists at Inroads
Being Made

SHANGHAI, May 1.—(AP)—Despite the nationalist advance through Shantung province and the capture of Tsinan after the cutting of the Tsinan-Tsingtao railway, the Japanese are continuing their strong efforts to maintain railway operation and to afford protection to their nationals in the Shantung capital.

An authoritative wireless message received by way of Tsingtao says that the Japanese have moved all available forces from Tsingtao to Tsinan, leaving only a transport with sailors at Tsingtao.

It is further stated that the Japanese forces have enclosed and forfeited several areas in Tsinan, declaring that this was made necessary for the protection of their nationals awaiting evacuation from the capital.

The bitterest condemnation is voiced by the Nanking government which accuses the Japanese of "seeking to block national successes" and adds that this likely to lead to "untoward developments."

The Nanking authorities further assert that the nationalist successes have thrown "entire Peking officialdom into a panic, Chang Tso-lin holding trains in readiness for a flight."

The northern reverses have caused the news censors at Peking to clamp down hard, only the briefest code messages arriving at Shanghai from the northern capital.

That Tired Feeling

Is it caused by overwork—either mental or physical—or is it due to a condition of the system known as "over-acidity"?

Scientists claim the latter cause to be largely responsible for lack of endurance, and emphasize the vital importance of maintaining the "Chemical Balance"—that margin by which alkali exceeds acid in the blood.

This natural tonic is Alkaline in action—neutralizes the acid and supplies mineral elements which are absolutely essential to health.
