Oregon is generously represented in the May issue of Sunset magazine both by way of material and authorship. "Land of the Ohgees," by Paul A. Ewing, is a brief travelogue, as it were, of Oregon highways, well illustrated with glimpses of the state's finest scenery. An Oregon athletic club is also featured. There are poems by Mary Carolyn Davies and Ethel Romig Fuller; also a gripping short-story, "Crown Fire," of forest ranger setting, by Charles Alexander, another prominent Oregon author.

The cover page is a highly artistic, colorful map of the northwestern and southwestern states, depicting in miniature the chief industries of each, and featuring the national parks.
