CONGRESS REDUCES TAX UPON INCOMES

WASHINGTON, May 15—(AP)—Individual income tax payers were given a prospective $25,000,000 slice of the pending $200,000,000 tax reduction Monday when the senate voted a downward revision of the surtax rate applying on incomes between $20,000 and $80,000.

TRADITION WINS OUT

Both propositions are subject to final vote on passage and the changes must be accepted by the house.

Republicans and democrats favored a downward revision of the surtax rate, which was ignored by the house, but all day was spent in arguing as to how it was to be effected. Senator Simmons of North Carolina, ranking democrat on the finance committee, proposed to accomplish the revision of the surtax rates beginning with $10,000 incomes and going up to $70,000, but republicans lined up solidly for the proposal of Senator Smoot, of Utah, chairman of the committee, which would have the lower rates begin with the $20,000 class. The vote for his proposition was 43 to 39, only 12 more than Maryland leaving the democratic caucus.

Senator Simmons and Senator Harrison, of Mississippi and Walsh of Massachusetts led the democratic fight, insisting greater attention be given to taxpayers of the smaller incomes. Senator Smoot and Senator Reid, republican of Pennsylvania, answered that this class had received the main benefits from past reductions at the expense of the taxpayers in the upper brackets of income. They declared the only purpose of any surtax revision was to equalize the rates applying on the intermediate incomes above $20,000 with cuts given other classes in the past.

Today's action virtually completed consideration of the changes made by the finance committee in the house bill but a batch of amendments proposed by individual members to various sections of the bill remain to be acted upon in addition to the row over the inheritance tax, which probably will come up tomorrow in an attempt to have it reported. With the rate schedules virtually disposed of, the senate tonight found itself with a $224,000,000 reduction measure on its hands. This is $24,000,000 above the limit set by President Coolidge and Secretary Mellon but far below the $280,000,000 house bill.
