DETERMINE RIGHTS OF WATER USERS

Relative rights among approximately 90 users of water from Silver creek and its tributaries, west of Burns, were determined in an order issued Thursday by Rhea Luper, state engineer. The order will be filed with the circuit court for Harney county.

Approximately 25,000 acres of land were involved in the proceeding. These included large meadow land holdings of the William Hanley company, which operates a cattle business on a large scale in Harney and Silver creek valleys near Burns.

These valleys are so formed that the meadow lands are flooded each spring by natural means, assisted in some instances by the construction of dams that cause the flood waters to spread over larger areas. The land owners claimed rights to irrigate the entire flooded area, even though much of this land is not in cultivation. They contended that the flood water increased the growth of natural grasses.

The decision requires that large areas of the second-class grazing lands around the borders of the hay meadows, be placed in a higher state of reclamation and irrigation before a final vested water right will be allowed for such lands and makes strict provision for the economical application of the water in the irrigation of lands, and for prevention of waste of water.
