And at even, when the sun did set, they brought unto Him all that were diseased, and them that were possessed with devils. And all the city was gathered together at the door, and He healed many that were sick of divers diseases. And cast out many devils, and suffered not the devils to speak, because they knew Him. Mark 1:32-34.

SIXTY YEARS

Some one has said that it would only take sixty grandmothers to tell the story of civilization—each grandmother telling her own sixty years of experience. What a marvelous story the last one could tell us! Sixty years of mighty achievements in science, in education and in government. What changes in styles, in social life, in communication, in transportation—a wonderful sixty years!

Sixty years ago the Civil war had but closed. The veterans of Shiloh, of Chickamauga, of Chancellorsville, of Gettysburg and many another bloody battle field had returned to their homes to begin life anew. Southern veterans returned to a devastated southland, with plantations laid waste, cities in ashes and all about them the wreck of a social system once almost feudal in its magnificence. The north, while escaping the actual ravages of war, suffered its share of the aftermath that follows all civil wars. Debts, business disrupted, factories idle and farms abandoned. And everywhere, both north and south, were the pitiful wrecks of noble young manhood, blinded, maimed—a nation's sacrifice on the altar of patriotism. What deluges of woman's tears! What aching, breaking hearts! Oh, the desolate mothers, the sorrowing widows, fatherless children and bereaved sisters! It was out of these aching hearts that was born the beautiful custom of decorating with spring's flowers the graves of the lost ones. Originating in the southland, it quickly spread to the north, and in 1868—just sixty years ago—it was made a national custom by the orders of General Logan who was then commander of the newly organized Grand Army of the Republic. And every year since then Decoration Day has been observed—May 30 in the north, and April 30 in the south. Both were actuated by the same tender motives, and the graves of Blue and Gray alike garlanded. No one thing did more to wipe out the bitter sectionalism—war's aftermath—than did this beautiful custom. Sixty years have gone. Only a handful of all those gallant hosts remain. Tomorrow they once again will observe the old custom. Their ranks have thinned. A few more years—God grant they may be lengthened—and we shall see no more the "Boys of '61" in their annual parade. Sixty years! Gray-haired men and women will look on with tear dimmed eyes remembering how they, as lads and lasses, used to march behind the blue clad veterans back in the '70's and '80's and their sons—some of them—will also march tomorrow. Some with decorations of service in the Spanish war or the Philippines—and their grandsons, too, will march, for they saw service in the World war. These generations have helped to keep the beautiful custom alive. Let us not lose it. Memorial Day is too sacred, too fraught with tender memories to be lost. There are other holidays for fishing, for golfing, for picnics and games. Keep Memorial day as a day of all days to remember the patriotic dead.

INTO THE DISCARD

(Eugene Register)

So far as the farmer is concerned, the McNary-Haugen bill went into the discard day before yesterday with the refusal of the senate to override the President's veto. There is no time to re-pass it in amended form at this session of congress, and there is probably no desire to do so even if there were time. The McNary-Haugen bill has served its purpose so far as congress and the politicians are concerned. Congress has an abili, and the politicians have an issue. So both are well satisfied.

In the grain belt, there is undoubtedly a considerable measure of sincere disappointment because of the bill's failure. Every farmer there who is heavily in debt for land bought at high prices during the war boom saw in the McNary-Haugen bill a way to get out. Every banker holding the paper of such farmers saw the same prospect. Reduced to essentials, the McNary-Haugen bill was a device to subsidize over-production of corn and wheat, and this subsidized over-production would have resulted in another grain belt farm boom. Those who are holding the sack from the last boom need another boom to pull them out of the hole. The obvious fact that another depression would inevitably follow another boom based upon subsidized over-production has not worried them, for they have said to themselves that they would get out before the depression came.

Whether the McNary-Haugen bill, in one form or another, will again become an issue in congress remains to be seen. Probably it will not at the next session of congress, for the next session will be held in an off political year, and the prospects for making a profitable political issue of it will not be alluring. By the time another session of congress in a campaign year rolls around, it is not improbable that the inequalities in the agricultural situation will have been remedied by natural forces.

So far as the present campaign year is concerned, the defeat of the McNary-Haugen bill will be made an important issue. It will be used by the enemies of Hoover to head off his nomination. It will be capitalized by the Democrats, in the event of Hoover's nomination, in an effort to win some of the disgruntled states in the grain belt. As for the dirt farmer, it is this writer's firm belief that he will be far better off in the long run because of the bill's failure. Its certain result would have been stimulation of heavy over-production, followed by a crash. We want no more agricultural crashes if we can avoid them.

The above, from the Eugene Register, is written along the general line of argument against the McNary-Haugen principle put forward for farm relief. It is far-fetched and more or less unfair.

The operation of the proposed McNary-Haugen farm relief law would not necessarily result in over production. Any way, that would regulate itself. And it has not been contemplated that the law would be applied to wheat and corn only. It would or could be applied to any major crop of which we produce an exportable surplus. To rice. Or beans. Or pork products. Or prunes, etc., etc.

But, to illustrate, take wheat. We produce, say 800,000,000 bushels of wheat. We consume 700,000,000 bushels. We must sell 100,000,000 bushels on the world market. The price of wheat would be fixed at, say 2 cents a bushel below the tariff charge on wheat, plus the world market price. The tariff charge is now 42 cents a bushel. Every bushel of wheat sold off the farm would pay, say 5 cents a bushel the first year, to build up the equalization fund to meet the loss on the 100,000,000 bushels sold abroad. That would net the grower, say 35 cents a bushel above the world price of wheat.

If, the next year, the wheat growers should produce 900,000,000 bushels, the equalization fee would have to be raised. If more, still more. So the matter of a prospective over production would regulate itself. The same as to corn, or pork, or prunes, or any other major crop to which the principle would be applied—

And the commission administering the law might exercise other checks against over production. They might refuse, in any year, to apply the law to any crop.

This is not an argument for the McNary-Haugen law. It is merely a statement of the fact that a great deal of the mass of criticism is unjust. First, those who opposed it the idea said it would not work. But they have quit that. It would work. It would have to work. As to whether it would be a good thing, that is another question. It is debatable.

It would certainly help producers of the major farm crops. The larger surplus they produced, the less it would help them, on account of the contributions to the equalization fund.

It would put tariff protection for them into effect. But would it be good for the rest of the country?

It would be no more a subsidy than a law giving tariff protection to a manufacturer. The arguments in support of this proposition are many. They would fill a shelf of books.

Dean Arrested in Canada; Governor Seeks Extradition

Governor Patterson today requested federal officials at Washington to launch proceedings looking to the extradition of Harry Dean, who is wanted in Oregon on a charge of larceny. Dean is under arrest at Charlottetown, Prince Edward Island, Canada. He previously escaped from the officers there but was apprehended a few days later.

Dean was alleged to have appropriated securities valued at $1900 from Andrew W. Welch of Portland, which he sold to Portland Brothers. After disposing of the stocks Dean left Portland and was next heard from in Canada. During his residence in Portland he operated with DeWitt Harry as the Guaranty Securities company. In Canada the extradition is granted by Canadian officials. Dean will be returned to Oregon by a Portland officer.

The governor's request for extradition proceedings was sent to Washington by air mail.
