PLEASING VARIETY FRESH FOODS HERE

With local crops reaching the marketable stage and California supplying other seasonable fruits and vegetables, the store windows, from the smallest to the largest, present a veritable garden of delight for those who like to build into a meal plenty of the fresh foods. And even a greater pick for the cook who thinks green vegetables and fresh fruits should constitute most of the meal.

Here is a list of what the various stores are offering for this week-end's trade, the condition in which they will usually be found, and the approximate price the consumer must expect to pay.

(On that matter of price, it is hard to quote to everyone's satisfaction, as there are at times almost as many prices for a single product as there are stores selling it. Oftimes the price is governed by the amount that commodity the store sells, thus those with the large turnover can afford to sell at a lower margin of profit and still realize a tidy profit.)

Pie cherries are new this week, and look to be of good quality, though not very ripe. Four pounds for 25 cents in several stores.

Gooseberries have been in the stores for nearly two weeks and are now more plentiful. The berries are firm and of good color, at six pounds for 25 cents.

Strawberries are very plentiful, though in some places the berries look more luscious and also ripier than in others. They are retailing at around five cents per box.

Yellow wax beans are new this week and are free from blemish and a nice size for home use. Price: five cents per pound.

Local rhubarb is still in evidence in fair quantities but not such large stalks as were obtainable when the season was at its height. It is the lowest price in weeks, being sold at three pounds for 10 cents.

Carrots, offered in the 5 cent bunches, are larger than when they first appeared on the market and are good firm quality.

Four pounds for 25 cents tells part of the story of the local peas. The other part is that they are at the height of the season now. The pods are well filled with good firm peas. The market is well stocked with them. Occasionally the pods are rough and "seedy" looking, and not like the nice smooth center shell noted on the half-formed peas that were offered the first of the season.

Small but solid heads of local cabbage are retailing at five cents per pound, with little waste in throwing away "stale" leaves.

Fresh coconuts are featured in several windows at two for 25 cents. They are of medium size.

Peppers are coming on again in larger quantities and are healthy looking and of fair size. They sell for 15 cents per pound.

Royal Anne cherries, not of fancy pack and not of very large size, are three pounds for 25 cents.

Asparagus, still good grass though the peak of the season is well past, is 15 cents a bunch, in the fancy pack.

Fresh tomatoes are offered in basket lots or by the pound, with the former selling for 25 cents and in the pound lots the price ranging around three for 25 cents. The south is offering some of the tomatoes and others come from the local greenhouses. Both are of good quality and have more color and taste than was evident in the earlier "love apples."

New potatoes, of good size and smooth in the main, bore tags of 10 pounds for 27 cents in a place or two.

Radishes, onions, beets and turnips are more plentiful than ever, and the latter two especially of larger size. Five cents a bunch is the prevailing price on radishes.

Price to the consumer is 5 1/2 cents per pound.

Apricots, the new crop from California, are about 25 cents a pound. Peaches, too, have made their appearance from the sunny south and the price is in keeping with their newness here.

Valencia oranges are taking the brunt of this demand, with only a few navals still on the market and at higher prices.

Lake Labish celery and lettuce is now being offered by the local stores and when local cooks know the course of these two commodities there will be no worry about the quality not being good and the vegetables fresh. The Labish lettuce is not, however, as soft as the exceptionally hard Wisconsin ton lettuce which also shares the market.

Rubber is made from sap. Also most of the rubbering is done in saps.—Lake County Tribune.

It's the story of a happy-go-lucky side show owner and his deadly rival, the small-town sheriff, both of whom are contending for the love of a supposedly wealthy widow.
